Cohasset Youth Lacrosse Camp

This one-week camp for boys and girls is designed to work on fundamental lacrosse skills, so that young players are prepared to deal with game situations next year. Each day will include drills designed to improve a player's stick-handling abilities, foot work and positioning, conditioning and stamina and knowledge of the game.

The camp is designed particularly to work with new and less-skilled players, helping them to decide in a relaxed setting whether lacrosse is a sport they want to play during the school year.

This camp is for players entering grade 3 through 6 in the fall. While the program is run by the Cohasset Recreation Department, it is open to players from other communities.

Chuck Jaffe, who runs the Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program, heads the camp. Jaffe started Cohasset's youth program in 1996 and coached boys' teams for six years until starting the girls' program in 2002. He has been a player and coach in a variety of programs around the country, ranging from his days as a player at the University of Michigan, through being an all-star player and coach with his Tampa Bay Lacrosse Club, the Lehigh Valley Killian's Red Lacrosse Club and more. He still plays regularly with the Brine/Atlantic Sportswear Club in some of the elite master's tournaments around the world.

Jaffe will be assisted by Jennifer Palmer of the Cohasset girls' program and several former Cohasset High School players. The camp's player-coach ratio will be no more than 10-1. The camp is held the week of July 19-23, and starts at 7:30 a.m. on all days. The camp ends at 10 a.m. on all days but Friday, when it runs until 10:30. The camp is held rain or shine — in all conditions except lightning — and parents should be prepared to retrieve children who have been playing in rain or rolling in mud.

Players need full equipment. For girls, this means a stick, goggles and a mouth-guard. For boys, it means a helmet (including mouthpiece), gloves, arm and shoulder pads and a stick.

Parents: The camp's director believes strongly in having properly sized equipment. For boys, that means sticks may be cut to 36 inches in length. Girls' sticks are sized based on their body size. Counselors will cut sticks for those players who need it, so parents providing their children with a stick borrowed from a friend, neighbor or relative should use tape to label the stick with the words "Do not cut," and should inform counselors. Players should bring their own water, juice or sports drinks to each day's sessions. Registration is $85. Call the Cohasset Recreation Department at 781-383-4109 for more information or to register.

The will of champions at stake, all of the girls played to win, and they played with heart," Meehan said.

One reason for that is the play of the team's seniors. In addition to their talent and experience, Meehan said it was their willingness to hit with some of the underclassmen on the team that fostered a team togetherness that she is always striving for.

"If I were a younger kid on the team, I would have found those girls to be inspirational," Meehan said. "I think every one of them could identify with one of those seniors. They were really different types of players."

Indeed, whether it was a hard hitter like Courtney Caron, a human backboard like Holly Graham, or the groundstrokes and net game of Emilie Sullivan and Corey Evans, the seniors presented an array of playing styles to their opponents. Meehan commended those four for not only being great athletes, but also mentally strong on the court.

As she has been throughout her high school career, junior Elizabeth Stone was an automatic point at first singles. Despite playing the each opponent's top player each match, Stone went undefeated in team play and did not even lose a set all year. A frequent competitor in national USTA tournaments, she also advanced to the sectional final of the individuals tournament, and has to be considered one of the favorites for that next year.

The other non-seniors who saw regular playing time were sophomore Chelsea Grossman and junior Rachel Garber. The two were versatile, interchangeable parts for Cohasset this year, both spending time at third singles and first doubles. After advancing to the sectional semifinal with Caron in the state doubles tournament, Grossman switched to singles for the end of the season and playoffs, and excelled. She did not lose a match in the tournament, and will likely take over the second singles spot next year.

Garber, meanwhile, had plenty of success of her own in singles, and teamed with Caron to win the clinching point in the sectional final over Old Rochester. Along with Stone and Emma Grinnell, Garber will be a senior co-captain next year.

With Stone and Grossman at singles, and Garber sure to be a regular somewhere, that leaves four spots open next year. There certainly will be plenty of competition for those spots, including the likes of Grinnell, Susan Curry and Katie Bolger, all of whom had success when called upon this year. And you can certainly count on some freshmen and sophomores being in the mix as well.

For that, Meehan credits middle school coach Michelle Murphy for her efforts. It is the new faces that show up in the middle of March that makes that time of year one of Meehan's favorites.

"Every year, I'm always pleasantly surprised by the number of girls interested in our program," she said.

The program has come a long way in the last several years, and it shows little sign of slowing down anytime soon.

A's Repeat as Major League Champions for the Mets, and with the bases loaded, Mike Monaco had a base hit into right field and batted in two runs for the A's. Max Maccleave returned the favor to Culhane, making a miracle catch in left field off a strong Culhane hit.

Maher struck out two in the next inning, and the A's had an easy out on a ground ball to second baseman Sean McKenna who flipped it to Monaco at first. In the bottom of the second, with two outs, Jack Murphy started a rally with a base hit to center field. However the A's couldn't convert the base runners and left them stranded. In the top of the third, the Mets bats came alive as Charlie Pham registered a base hit, Drew Cobin had a double, and Robby McCunney walked.

Robert Jones had a nice base hit off Maher for an RBI to tie the game up. An alert Mike Monaco threw the second base runner stealing home out, as Brendan Doonan tagged him.

In his final pitching effort, Johnny Maher struck out the last two batters. In the bottom half of the inning, the A's couldn't bring the base runners home, leaving two men stranded. In the top of the fourth inning, the Mets bats came alive. Sam Leahy had a solid base hit, Colin Tarpey had a shot to right field that resulted in a base hit, Drew Cobin delivered a single and Robby McCunney had an RBI single. The score was tied 2-2. Robert Jones for the Mets hit a shot that Brendan Doonan, now pitching, flipped to Maher behind the plate to tag out the go ahead run, and then Maher turned the double play, firing it to Mike Monaco at first to end the inning. In the bottom of the fourth, Jack Murphy walked, Andy Mckenna hit a bomb to center field that was expertly handled by Colin Tarpey for the out, and Brendan Doonan walked.

With men on first and third, Johnny Maher steps to the plate and delivers a shot over the outfield fence. It was a three run homerun that put the A's on top for the rest of the game. Jake Kissick had a great at bat, fouling off countless balls and finally walking. Andy McKenna in the bottom of the fifth had an RBI double, Maher had a sacrifice fly for an RBI. Brendan Doonan, pitching the last three innings for the A's struck out three Mets. Drew Cobin pitched through strongly throughout the game for the Mets. The game ended with A's center fielder Jack Murphy making back to back big catches for the final two outs. The A's came away victorious, winning for the second time in two years.

The second year Mets had a great season, highlighted by veteran Robby McCunney's twelve home runs. Teammates Max Maccleave and Drew Cobin joined the exclusive list of home run hitters along with the A's Brendan Doonan, with seven home runs and Johnny Maher with two, from the Red Sox slugger Jordan Berry with six home runs, from the Cardinals veteran Todd Emanuello and rookie Patrick Kearney with one each and big brother John Kearney with three home runs and from the Rangers rookie Jamie Faber with one home run.

Running the bases for the final time for the Mets were veterans Zach Moskow, Tom Condon, Charlie Pham and Robby McCunney. Although losing some talented veterans, the Mets look poised for another strong season next year. Robert Jones, Drew Cobin, Colin Tarpey, Gabe Seksay, Jeff Durkin, Taylor Golz, Max McCleave, and Sam Leahy will lead the charge for the Mets.

A's coach Rob Doonan, retiring this year after back to back championships, is proud of his team, "the A's never give up, they learn from their mistakes and try harder the next time". "There is something special about being an A" Doonan commented. "I hope in two years, when my youngest son Terrance is eligible for the Majors, the brother rule still applies, and he can proudly wear the green like his two older brothers". Doonan complimented veterans Andy McKenna, Jack Murphy, Jake Kissick, Thomas Barrett, John Plante, Johnny Maher and Brendan Doonan as they ceremoniously ran the bases for the final time, in the final game of the CYBSA 2004 Spring season. Derek Froio, EJ Culhane, Mike Monaco, Chase Murphy, Chris Murphy, and Sean McKenna will lead the mighty green next year.

A's All-Star Johnny Maher came up big in Tuesday night's championship game on the mound and at the plate, with a huge three-run homer.

Previte shines at New England showcase

CHS lacrosse star named an all-star at premier recruiting camp

The New England Premier Lacrosse College Recruiting Showcase is one of the largest attended college recruiting showcases in the country today. Only the best high school lacrosse players are able to demonstrate their skills in game situations- in front of over 100 DI, DII, and DIII college coaches.

There are close to 300 players in attendance. The All-Star players are voted upon by all the coaches from each team- and only 20-25 players are chosen. Jake (Justin)Previte, a junior attackman at Cohasset High, was one of those chosen for this incredible team.

Jake, who had a team best 93 points this spring for the CHS team, was still able to score one or two goals per game during the showcase-- including one on a behind-the-back shot and another against Duxury star goalie Polcari—on his way to making the All-Star team.

This New England Premier showcase is not instructional tournament; it is a recruiting combine. The boys are placed on teams as individuals (this is not for high school teams to attend as a team), so there is a disadvantage to not knowing who you are playing with, and what your teammates various strengths and weaknesses might be.

Each player plays non-stop lacrosse games for two days, a total of six games, plus the All Star game at the end. All-Star players are voted on by the men who served as these boys team coaches for the showcase.

Every year, this showcase is completely sold out. 23 states are represented—including all of the New England states, the entire eastern seaboard, New York, Georgia, Colorado, California, Texas, Ohio, and Hawaii. More than 175 different high schools have players here, as well as prep schools.

Congratulations to Jake. Ya did good for Cohasset Lacrosse!

Kahn wraps up career in style

Cohasset's Jackie Kahn was named to the 2004 All-Centennial Conference Women's lacrosse first team in balloting by the league's 10 head coaches.

Kahn led the team in scoring with 54 goals and 10 assists for 64 points and finished second in the Centennial in goals and eighth in points per game averaging 4.0 per contest. The senior co-captain also finished ninth in the conference in ground balls (3.2 pg) and draw controls (2.19 pg).

Kahn finished her career with 146 goals, 27 assists and 173 points, good for seventh on Swarthmore's career goals and points lists.

Kahn received up 37 ground balls, forced 10 turnovers and won eight draw controls while marking the opponents top attacker.

Down on their luck

ized on a couple of walks and an error to plate another pair in the top of the seventh, enabling them to escape with the win.

"What else can you say," offered Post 118 coach Mike Duggan. "Things are just going against us right now. We're in a stretch of six games in six days, and we've lost a few players to injury and the tough luck seems to be piling on a little.

"Baseball is a game of momentum, and we don't seem to be generating much of that right now."

Hurler Greg Malley suffered a broken wrist just before the current six day gauntlet began, and joined projected staff ace Mark Rennie (torn ligaments in pitching hand finger) on the DL for the remainder of the season.

This situation is forcing pitchers Straughn, Joe Duggan, Jack O'Leary, Jeff Radding and Shane Caffrey to go on short rest.

"Guys who were relievers are now starting and starters are going on short rest," continued Duggan. "It's a tough situation."

The shortage of arms wasn't the biggest problem in Monday's 12-0 loss to Quincy at Adams Field; that would have been Post 95's Ian Jorgensen. The big Quincy righthander tossed a complete game no-hitter, striking out eight while walking just three, and led the charge on offense as well, going 3-for-3 with a 400-foot plus home run to left center.

"Yeah, we've definitely seen enough of that kid," noted Duggan, whose team fell to 1-8-1 with the loss.

One bright spot in that game was a relief stint by Brandon Stella. The crafty lefty notched a strikeout and generally kept Quincy batters off balance. Unfortunately, a couple of the fly balls he induced were misplayed and wound up leading to two unearned runs.

Last Friday's game at West Roxbury was postponed due to rain after four innings, and will be made up in its entirety at some point.

Cohasset was slated to travel to Canton this past Tuesday (the makeup of a June 29 rain out), host Stoughton yesterday and Canton tonight (5:45 at Scituate High), then travel to Braintree to play under the lights at BHS tomorrow (8 p.m. start).

The local lads then get two whole days off before getting back to it with a trip to Dorchester on Monday and Milton on Wednesday.

"It's not easy to lose, but the good news is the kids are keeping their heads high and come ready to compete every game," said Duggan following Monday's loss. "And it is baseball. We're having fun. The good news is we've got four more games this week."

Scout's camp project puts her on track for Silver Award

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Last summer, Colleen Richardson ran her own day camp for a few hours every day for one week. She and nine children played soccer, T-ball, and other games, and at the end of the program, she walked away with an experience that could one day help her get into college.

Colleen, 15, who just completed her freshman year at Cohasset High School, ran the day camp as a project, which will help her earn a Silver Award for Girl Scouts. The second highest honor a Girl Scout can achieve, the Silver Award has been a project in the making since Colleen was a Cadet Girl Scout in the seventh grade.

"I originally wanted to do a soccer clinic," said Colleen, but because many of the fields around town were all being reseeded last summer, her options were limited. She then decided to use her own backyard, with her mother's approval, as a makeshift field for the boys and girls who participated in her camp.

Colleen's youngest sister Julia, 6, provided some of the inspiration for the project. Many of the children who came to the camp were Julia's friends, and were between the ages of four and five last summer. "The kids were able to play and they had a lot of fun," said Colleen.

However, running the camp was not without its drawbacks. For two days during the week, Colleen said it rained, and all nine children had to be brought inside, which made it necessary to improvise to keep the children entertained.

In preparation for her Silver Award project, Colleen said she had to complete interest projects, which are all related to and lead up to the final Silver Award project. She said while she has now completed all the requirements necessary to receive her Silver Award, she and a few other Girl Scouts will participate in a Silver Awards ceremony next fall, where they will formally be given their awards. The next step for her will be to begin preparing for her final Gold Award project, which is the highest honor a Girl Scout can receive. Colleen said while she isn't quite sure what that project will be just yet, she said it will have to be something which is not sports related, as she has already completed the majority of interest projects related to sports for her Silver Award.

Colleen has been participating in Girl Scouts since Kindergarten. She said her motivation for scouting has changed over the years, and many girls today have more of an incentive to stay with it because it looks great on college applications. She said by participating in Girl Scouts, she has learned how to "work independently on projects," which will help her in any path she chooses in life. It seems the good example she sets has rubbed off on her two younger sisters as well, as 12-year-old Meghan is a Junior Girl Scout, and Julia is a Daisy Girl Scout.

"The kids were able to play and they had a lot of fun."
— Colleen Richardson, Girl Scout

Other project Colleen and the girls in troop 4778 have been involved with include selling Girl Scout cookies to be sent to troops overseas, and organizing a camping trip to Cedar Hill in Walpole for all the Girl Scout troops. She said many of the projects her troop undertakes have been to assist other Cohasset troops, making theirs a true community effort.

Aside from Girl Scouts, Colleen said she plays both soccer and lacrosse for the high school, and likes hanging out with her friends.

Pilgrim descendants hold a peregrination

Spend day at beach in Cohasset

Lou Harvey, who is treasurer of Plimoth Plantation, addresses the descendants at the Pierson home. A peregrination is a journey in which Pilgrim descendants journey back to their roots. The event is usually held in Plymouth but this year it came to Cohasset.

Peg Baker, director of the Pilgrim Hall Museum, and James Baker of the Massachusetts Mayflower Society (and curator of the Alden House) enjoy the apple pie and ice cream.

Lew Cedrone, a descendant of the Mayflower's Alden and Standish families, takes a walk out to view the ocean that his ancestors were very familiar with.

Mayflower descendants Rob Severy and Bette Bradway take a walk out to the beach behind the Pierson home on Atlantic Avenue. Wig and Molly Pierson hosted the event on Saturday.

Wildlife center focuses on vision

Inside Building 47, a small ramshackle bungalow that has served as the main clinic of the New England Wildlife Center for more than 20 years, the front room is packed floor-to-ceiling with injured or orphaned animals: a pregnant snapping turtle with a fractured jaw, a crooked chipmunk, a pair of pigeons, baby skunk orphans, young raccoons, sparrows, a catbird and more.

"The number one reason animals are here is because they're hit by cars," explains Greg Mertz, D.V.M., executive director and 14-year veteran of the center in Hingham's Bare Cove Park.

The suburban preoccupation with lawn maintenance is another major culprit; blade trauma is obvious, but lawn chemicals whose cumulative effects are less evident also take their toll on wildlife, he says. The number of patients at the clinic would also be significantly reduced if people's pets were more closely supervised or kept inside.

"This was a dog's play toy," he says, examining a patched-up painted turtle who'd clearly been through the wringer, "and this mourning dove was attacked by a cat."

Stephanie Ellis, "vet tech" and avian specialist, held an early nestling, and squirts droppers of food down his gaping gullet. "He's doing so well!" she says. "The woman who brought him in had him for five days, and he's fat and happy! She really did a great job!"

Indeed, it's a great credit to Dr. Mertz and his staff that this constrained facility in the middle of an old WWII depot is one of the leading wildlife hospitals in the country, a place where more than 4,000 animals are treated each year.

The center is often perceived as a rescue society, but Mertz explains its true purpose is to be an education, training and rehabilitation center. "Unlike commercial vets who mainly treat two species (dogs and cats), we accept any animal," he says, having dealt with 225 different species.

The objective is to treat and release rehabilitated animals, giving hands-on experience to interns and practical experience to the professional staff. So although a blue-tongued skink (a former pet, native to Australia) is not releasable in New England, it is used for teaching demonstrations and outreach for the public; so is a one-eyed screech owl no longer equipped to survive in the wild.

Of his patients, Mertz says, "67 percent are birds, 29 percent are mammals, 4 percent are reptiles, a little over 56 percent are released, 9 percent are euthanized...100 percent of all patients are educational."

He stresses the importance of admitting native and non-native species alike for educational purposes. And he doesn't mean just for the interns and trainees — he includes the local person who drops off the baby bunny at the clinic and considers the good deed done.

Mertz doesn't want the drop-off to be the end of the relationship, but hopes that such encounters will mark the beginning of a closer bond to the natural world. He quotes Senegali conservationist Baba Dioum as encapsulating the importance of the center's educational mission: "In the end we will conserve only what we love. We will love only what we understand. We will understand only what we have been taught."

He rues the fact that although there may be fascination with the denizens of rainforests and the tundra, kids here "can't tell the difference between a black-backed gull and a herring gull" or identify the creatures living in their own backyard. He says that "dramatic misunderstandings" will persist until people are educated, but has faith that "once they understand, they will protect."

Mertz also describes a new training program coordinated in tandem with the World Society for the Protection of Animals' South American branch, which will bring Colombian pairs of conservation agents to the center. "There's high degree of poaching there in a region that has the largest diversity of animals. The agents know how to deal with the poachers, but not with the animals..."

The scope of the plans, the ever-increasing number of animals, the expanding projects, the talents and skills of those who are drawn to work there, the innovative outreach programs, the ideas, are far too big for Building 47.

So Mertz, who clearly loves to talk about education and animals, is no less enthusiastic about the prospect of demolishing Building 47. "It's time to move," says the 14-year veteran of the center.

Ordinary citizens can help wildlife

Laura Liptak found the tiny bird in the parking lot where she works at the Audubon Society's Blue Hills Trailside Museum. The first thing she did was to check for a nest, hoping there was a chance she could return the bird to safety. But other babies beneath the nest were all dead, with no parent in sight.

Luckily, the nestling had just enough feathering to enable her Audubon colleague to identify the bird as a starling. "That was really important, because I went on the Web and found that feeding is species-specific; for instance, starlings are insectivores, and they're water-intolerant."

She learned incorrect or insufficient feeding can be fatal. So she brought the tiny creature everywhere with her, and from dawn to dusk, every 20 minutes, for five full days "and even a couple of times during the night, if I'd wake up," she fed the baby bird a mix of kitten food, apple sauce and hard boiled egg.

When it was clear that the baby bird was beginning to imprint on Laura, she knew that it was time for it to be rehabilitated with his own kind. "My boyfriend wasn't exactly sorry about this," she admits, and so she brought him to the New England Wildlife Center.

This level of educated involvement and dedication is what's fostered at the center. Says Dr. Greg Mertz, "All people should participate in the stewardship of animals and their environment. Right now, there's an iron curtain of experts. There needs to be a permeable boundary, through which the average person can actively get involved."

ARCHITECT'S RENDERING BY STREKALOVSKY, HOIT AND RAYMOND

An architect's rendering of the Thomas E. Curtis Wildlife Teaching Hospital and Education Center being built in Weymouth.

New center to have more creature comforts

Building is friendly to the environment

Dr. Greg Mertz and his dedicated staff eagerly look forward to next summer. The world-class nonprofit center will be appropriately headquartered in a state-of-the-art "green" building that will itself represent the mission of the center: harmonious integration of humans and the environment, a metaphor for the values and purpose of conservation and habitat awareness fostered by the center. Visiting the building to be called, the Thomas E. Curtis Wildlife Teaching Hospital and Education Center, will be an education in itself.

"Greg knows I can be held personally accountable!" laughs Vcevy Strekalovsky, of Hingham architectural firm Strekalovsky, Hoit and Raymond, designers of the new building. His daughter is a long-time favorite volunteer at the center, so "every time I see a squirrel put back on his feet, I'm reminded; there's a strong family commitment, and the firm feels a strong sense of being part of the community. We're glad for the opportunity to do a meaningful project that'll touch a lot of people's lives." Principal Roger Hoit happens to be one of the Wildlife Center's founders.

The new center will be one of fewer than 50 Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED) certified buildings in the U.S. Although it's leading-edge, the design has a simple rusticity, with a lodge-like theme; Strekalovsky says that the three-level building will have a footprint which will minimize site impact, and the natural grade will be retained wherever possible in order to leave the trees undisturbed. Utilizing green technologies to reduce long-term operating costs and significantly reduce environmental impact, the LEED building will be an open and airy, with alcoves and natural sunlight on all floors, with an atrium uniting the space. From the library and classrooms to the recovery wards, to the very workings of the building itself, the center is designed to be synergistic, to embody the ideal of demonstrating minimal harmful human impact on animals and the environment. Building materials will be recycled, recyclable, locally produced or made from conscientiously created components.

The center is designed to be synergistic, to embody the ideal of demonstrating minimal harmful human impact on animals and the environment.

One example of green technology is the implementation of photovoltaic shingles. These serve as conventional shingles for weather protection while generating clean solar energy by converting light (photons) to electricity (voltage). Excess energy generated can be sold back to the grid, and visitors will be able to actually see on a monitor how much electricity is being generated.

The 12.4 acre site was donated by the Curtis family of Hingham. The Thomas E. Curtis Wildlife Hospital and Training Center will be located in Weymouth; with construction scheduled to begin next month, completion is slated for next summer.

There will be lots of trees on the site, but certainly no lawns to mow with killer blades; and there may be a few dandelions.

Hingham ties

Hingham residents will still be able to bring injured or orphaned wildlife to a satellite clinic which will remain at Bare Cove Park; the center will retain 3 or 4 acres for the interns' quarters and large pre-release enclosures, and the camp programs and some other educational sessions will also continue to be conducted at the old site.

To support this model of environmentally sensitive building technology for the LEED certified Thomas E. Curtis Wildlife Teaching Hospital and Education Center, corporate and organizational sponsors are being sought. Individual contributions are also welcome. Children in for a world of fun at new town playground

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Before the summer is through, there will be a new place to play in Cohasset, as plans to build a playground behind the Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum have finally come to fruition.

For the past two years, co-chairs for Project Playground Muffy Antico and Logan Bernstein, have been coordinating fund raising activities and planning for the day when installation can begin. But with a $100,000 fund raising goal to make the dream a reality, seeing the playground through from beginning to end has been no small task.

"We've raised this money from people in town who have been very generous," said Antico, adding residents around town have been extremely supportive. She said roughly 10 households hosted dinner parties, where couples donated $100 each to the playground, and many residents have attended various fund raisers, including dinners featuring live bands at the Red Lion Inn, and Project Playground's "mistletoe boutique." Antico said the mistletoe boutique will be held again this November, and vendors will once again return to sell arts and crafts, jewelry, and children's clothing.

Antico also said local businesses, town departments, and boards have been great at helping out as well. Graham Waste has generously donated excavating services for the project, Brendan St. John has donated installation services, and arborist Gary Barrow volunteered to help cut back some of the tree limbs on site to make sure children have a clear, open space to play in. The Community Preservation Committee donated $15,000 for the project, and the Department of Public Works, especially Carl Sestito, have been instrumental in getting the project started as well.

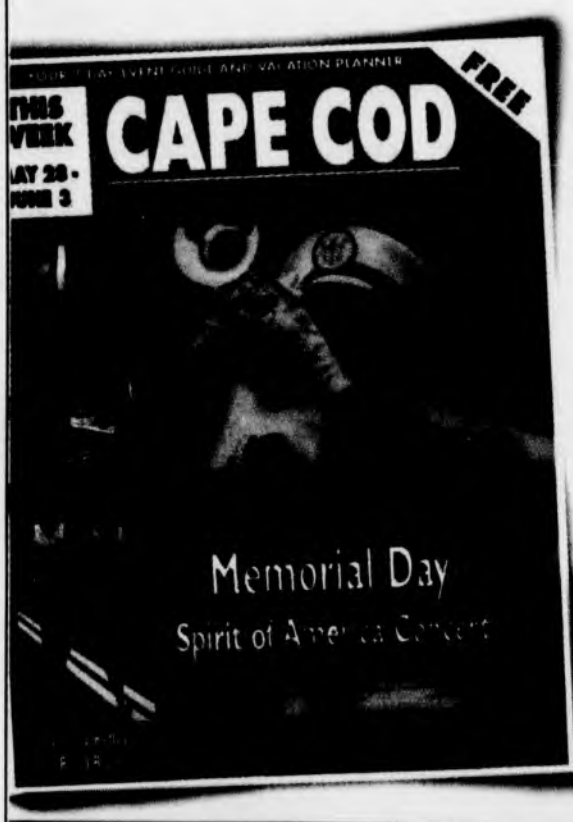
"Everyone sees the need," for a playground in town said Bernstein, which is why she believes the idea caught on. Although the playground will be linked to the museum, located at the rear of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, located on Ripley Road, at the end of construction, it will be turned over to the town, and will be a destination she and Antico hope families can all enjoy together. The two said throughout the entire process, the response from the community has been absolutely overwhelming, and everyone is very excited to see the final stage get underway.

Donations are being accepted until July 15, and those interested in contributing can call Michele Dupuis at (781) 383- 3198.

The playground will be made of plastic and steel, making it much more durable than its wooden predecessor, and it has a 100 year warranty. It complies with the most up-to-date safety standards and is handicap accessible.

The previous town playground, while once impressive, was torn down when it was no longer considered safe, and Antico and Bernstein say the new playground will be even better. The equipment included in the playground is interchangeable, which means additional structures can be added to the pieces that already exist, or can be traded out, to offer children more variety in the play structure. All it will take is a little more fundraising.

The playground will have two sections to accommodate children ages 2-5 and 5-12. There will be swings, slides, structures for climbing, and hiding places to crawl through. Antico and Bernstein said the colors for the playground were chosen specifically taking neighbors into consideration. Structures are blue, green, and beige, mimicking the colors of nature, rather than primary colors that don't blend in as easily with the natural environment.



Along with the fun children will have at the playground, Bernstein said it will also be very educational as the group has plans to incorporate themes from the museum into the play structure. Certain pieces of the play structure will have attachments to replicate different places to live around the world, including an adobe hut or the city. When children come down the slide, they will emerge through an igloo door. The highest points of the play structure will replicate mountain tops, and some of the lower lying areas will depict the sea and corn fields.

Michele Dupuis, Program Coordinator for the museum, said the playground will be a unique destination which will incorporate creativity as well as lessons on diversity. Project Playground and the museum staff will be working together to incorporate facets of the museum's programming into the play structure, helping children learn in a fun, relaxed environment.

In addition to the playground, there will be picnic tables as well as tables featuring chess and checkerboard tops, which will hopefully encourage young and old alike to see the playground as a destination point in town. Antico said many seniors in town love interacting with children, and some like to be able to have a seat to watch them play. By having checkers and chess available, intergenerational friendships will hopefully be sparked.

"It's going to be the best playground on the South Shore," Bernstein said.

Antico and Bernstein say they hope to see excavating for the project begin this week, but they are still working hard to raise additional funds for the project. Donations are being accepted until July 15, and those interested in contributing can call Michele Dupuis at (781) 383-3198. Those who donate will be entered into a drawing for two tickets to a Music Circus performance of their choice.

Hingham gears up to 'Celebrate America'

Parade is Sunday July 4, at 1 p.m.

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Amanda Palmer displays a Fourth of July button for sale at Bowl & Board and other places around Hingham to support Sunday's parade.

It's no wonder the entire town is looking forward to the long Fourth of July weekend. Enjoying Hingham's traditional celebration is like taking a step back in time to an era when life was more relaxed and carefree and community-wide goodwill was bountiful.

Lots of traditional activities are planned for Hingham residents and visitors alike, beginning Friday, July 2, with fireworks and ending with the Sunday, July 4 parade, which steps out from the High School at 1 p.m. The Selectmen asked that the usual 10 a.m. start be moved to the later time so as not to conflict with worship services.

But there's plenty to do while waiting for the parade to begin, including enjoying the mouth-watering pancake breakfast served by the Kiwanis Club on the Hingham Centre Common from 10 a.m. until the start of the parade. Or you could munch on a delicious picnic lunch on the broad front lawn of the Old Ship Church Parish House, 107 Main St., from noon to 3 p.m. while eagerly waiting for, or watching, the parade. (See related sidebars.)

The celebration stretches into the following weekend with a Satuit Band concert on Friday, July 9, at 7:30 p.m. at the Hingham Harbor Bandstand.

Weekend festivities kick off with the Hingham Lions Club annual celebration at Hingham Bathing Beach July 2, beginning with entertainment at 5:30 p.m. There will be a concert by the Perry Rossi Orchestra, a 50/50 raffle, and fireworks, considered by many to be the best display on the South Shore, at dusk. The raindate is Mon., July 5.

The traditional Fourth of July fair will include many tasty snacks, ranging from fried dough and fresh lemonade to sausages and other treats. Proceeds from the event will benefit Hingham Lions Club charities. July 4th Lions Club T-shirts will be on sale at the fireworks and during the parade to raise money for eye research.

Sun., July 4, starts off with a road race organized by the Hingham Recreation Commission beginning at 7 a.m. (Registration begins at 5:30 a.m. at the Middle School, 1103 Main St.)

The hour-long or so parade, which one Parade Committee member called a "folksy town event," steps out from the High School on Pleasant Street at 1 p.m. This year's theme, "Celebrate America," was chosen by the Committee as a simple way to remember "all the things we are grateful for living in this great nation of ours."

This year's Grand Marshal is longtime conservation activist/photographer./teacher/tennis coach/resident Phil Swanson, who was named the Hingham Journal's first Citizen of the Year several years ago.

The parade will feature lively marching bands, floats, antique cars, sports teams, members of the military — including Hingham's own 1058th Transportation Company — and the South Shore Joeys clowns. Old favorites include the Hingham Militia, the Crow Point Marching Kazoo Band, Mariachi Mixicana, Satuit Band, Colonial Pipers, and the Festival Brass Band. Other participants include the Weymouth High School Band, the D.A.R.E. program, Lincoln Sailing Center, and the friendly Cinnamon Bear.

"My enthusiasm for the parade started when we moved to Middle Street in 1979," said Parade Committee member Liz Bridges. It has been a tradition for many years for Middle Street residents to invite friends and relatives to enjoy a picnic in their front yards as they watch the parade go by. "We've planned a special event, including fabulous bands. In fact, we just hired the Imperial Drum and Bugle Corps to march in the parade." That's unusual, because some bands need to be booked a year or more in advance to ensure their availability.

Hingham's own A. Alden Carpenter will march as Uncle Sam as he has for the past several years except for when his twin brother stepped in to fill his hat a couple of years ago due to a last minute change in plans.

"It's a privilege to be Uncle Sam," Carpenter said. "I get a great thrill out of people's responses. Uncle Sam basically represents good old-fashioned patriotism, George Washington, and the good things about government."

Why the George Washington analogy? "Uncle Sam was tall like Washington, whose height was 6-feet, 4-inches. Uncle Sam is a real attention-getter, and it's good to carry on a tradition that began more than 100 years ago."

Friends and family members of Hingham High School graduate Jess Burke will carry 50 or more three-foot by four-foot banners featuring photographs of Hingham citizens who reflect the town's diversity as the culmination of a "Hinghamites" project she undertook earlier this year. Burke has been visiting various groups, organizations, houses of worship, and residents, which has resulted in a photographic celebration of the diversity in the Hingham community. "I've had a great response," she said. "The town has been very enthusiastic."

The project was designed to bring the community closer together by helping residents of all ages recognize the diversity of their hometown. "Hinghamites" was designated a "Gold Star" project by the Massachusetts Cultural Council (MCC) and was funded by the MCC, the Wilder Charitable and Educational Fund, and the Hingham Cultural Council.

Aquarion Water Company will provide cups of water at the beginning and end of the route.

Thousands of spectators normally line the parade route, many decked out in red, white, and blue outfits and waving flags. Because the usual large crowd of residents of Hingham and other South Shore communities and out-of-town visitors is expected, spectators are encouraged to arrive early (preferably on foot or by bicycle) and avoid parking along the parade route. Many former Hingham residents with fond memories of past parades return year after year because they don't want to miss the event.

"I think there will be even more enthusiasm than usual this year as people gather together during a time of war and threats to peace because they're thankful for Hingham and their families," Bridges said.

There will be a new parade route this year due to Greenbush construction. The parade will travel down Main Street as usual, but will turn left onto South Street, ending at South and Central streets instead of the Station Street parking lot. A shuttle bus at the end of the parade route will deliver participants back to the high school.

The parade, which is organized by a group of 20 dedicated volunteers, is paid for by parade button sales, proceeds from the Selectmen's Golf Tournament, Rotary Club fund raisers, and private donations. Rotary Club members will sell parade buttons to spectators.

"What really strikes me is the number of young people who have stepped forward to run the tournament and help out with parade planning," Bridges said. "They've brought new enthusiasm to the Fourth of July."

More volunteers are needed to walk the parade route to accompany each section to ensure a smooth parade flow and to offer assistance to participants as needed. For further information, call Cynthia Tonucci at (781) 749-0534 or visit www.hingham-ma.com.

IT'S HAPPENING

Straits Pond through the years and seasons

The Straits Pond Watershed Association (SPWA) is putting a call out to individuals and/or community groups seeking video footage, digital photos, or regular photos of scenes of Straits Pond. They are seeking scenes from Straits Pond through the years. They are also looking for photos taken over the coming year showing Straits Pond through the four seasons.

The association hopes to, over the course of the year, gather enough material from different views around the Pond to put together a photo collage/video of "Straits Pond Through the Years and Seasons".

Video tapes or disks with digital images or hardcopy photos may be mailed to Mr. Lawry Reid, Attn.: SPWA – Video Project, 31 Richards Road, Hull MA 02045.

Digital photos or scanned images can be emailed to Lawry Reid at viaspeech@comcast.net.

Whether mailing items or emailing them, clearly state either on the label or in your email message:

- the year or season
- where the pictures were taken from and/or what the image is of
- who took the photo/video,
- and for electronic photos the format they are saved in. Recommended formats are .tif, gif, .ps, or eps.

If you have regular photos and can scan them, do so and send the electronic image. If you do not have access to a scanner, you can mail the photos to Lawry Reid. SPWA will take care of getting them scanned.

Items will only be returned if clearly marked "Return to Sender when done" with a complete mailing address.

Submission of material(s) indicates the sender's permission and agreement that the material may be used at the discretion of the Straits Pond Watershed Association for educational, promotional, and/or fund-raising purposes without remuneration to the contributor.

WORSHIP NOTES

Anglican priest from Uganda at St. Stephen's

Israel Ahimbisibwe, an Anglican priest from the Diocese of Ankole in the Province of the Anglican Church of Uganda, has begun an internship and missionary year at St. Stephen Church, 16 Highland Ave. As missionary, Ahimbisibwe will participate fully in the worship life of the church. His gifts include teaching and evangelization. He will offer service our Godly Play church school and serve in our youth ministry as well. Israel Ahimbisibwe is 38 years old. His wife's name is Dorcas. They have two sons, Emmanuel, age 7, and Isaac who is 8. It is hoped that Israel's family may join him in Cohasset for two months at the end of the summer. Following his year, Israel will return to Uganda to take up a post as theological instructor of the Old Testament.

The Church of Uganda has an evangelical heritage and Israel accepted Jesus as Savior in 1987 through the witness of Campus Crusade for Christ. At the time he was in training to become a high school teacher of chemistry and biology. His first assignment was the Diocesan High School. Tragically, Israel's two elder sisters died of HIV/AIDS in 1992 and 1994. He felt an inner call to serve Uganda's young people. God's message to him was "You have to reach out to these young boys and girls before HIV/AIDS reaches them first." The pandemic of AIDS has ravaged communities and whole generations of people in Africa. The Ugandan Church has responded with the vision that "our children will be born and live in a world without AIDS." In the 1990s the HIV infection rate in Uganda was more than 20 percent. Through the ministry of people like Israel and others the infection rate has now been brought down to less than 5 percent. Uganda's story gives hope to the rest of Africa. Since Israel's own family suffered loss to AIDS, his witness to Ugandan youth stood in powerful contrast to the cultural fear of stigma. Israel's vision for Christ and a country free of AIDS was supported by teachers and parents where he taught and spoke. His bishop took notice and sent him for further theological education.

Following three years of seminary in Uganda, Israel worked as a University Chaplain. The Provincial Education Committee soon recommended him for additional studies in the United States. In 1997, he obtained a Master's of Theology at Princeton Theological Seminary after which he returned to his family in Mbarara, one of Uganda's major towns located 176 miles southwest of Kampala. Most of Mbarara was destroyed during Uganda's civil war, and it has only been partly rebuilt. Though rich in resources, its economy is poor. During this time in Uganda Israel worked as coordinator of Theological Education by Extension in his home diocese. Most recently, he again was sent for further education in the United States, receiving this June a master's degree in Hebrew and Old Testament from Harvard Divinity School. His internship at St. Stephen's is an opportunity for parish-based ministry in the United States before returning to Uganda at the end of May, 2005.

LISTEN To Life

by John Klefeker, BC-HIS

Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

NEWS FOR OLDER WOMEN

According to a pilot study funded by the National Institutes of Health, women who undergo hormone-replacement therapy (HRT) may have an increased risk for diminished hearing. On average, depending on the measure, women receiving HRT were found to do anywhere from 10% to 30% worse on hearing tests than women who had not received HRT. The HRT group preformed most poorly on a test geared at measuring not just how well the ear actually detects sound, but also how well the brain processes the information. Much of the hearing loss associated with presbycusis (age-related hearing loss) involves the brain's faltering ability to process information. It is this ability that was found to be most diminished in women who received HRT.

Too often, we take our hearing for granted. So much of our interaction with the world depends on an accurate sense of sound. If you suffer from a hearing difficulty, however, consider how much of life you may be missing. Here at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth, we are vitally concerned that every person benefit from good hearing. To that end, we provide individual counseling to help those with hearing loss function more effectively in social, educational, and occupational environments. Why not call us soon for a hearing test? PH: 781-337-1144.

P.S. The onset of presbycusis is most noticeable in situations in which there is a lot of background noise and it is difficult to hear the words of a conversation partner.

Eatery plans to grow

DiNero's says parking can be reconfigured

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

What began as a small pizza parlor more than 50 years ago has grown into a lucrative restaurant business, and owners of DiNero's restaurant believe it is time to expand their current operation.

With a long history of serving Cohasset residents and a list of loyal patrons who continue to visit the restaurant on a regular basis, current owners have been looking for a way to better accommodate guests. Through the addition of a new function room, space will be freed up in the main dining room, allowing tables to be more spread out, which will have patrons sitting more comfortably at their tables. In addition, the function room will increase the variety of services the restaurant can provide.

Browns love to make music

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Standing in the kitchen of their King Street home, guitars in hand, Abby, Sarah, and Audrey Brown sing together with harmonies only the voices of sisters can match. With their chords down pat and feet tapping to the rhythm, their professionalism makes it hard to believe none has yet graduated from elementary school.

At 10, 9, and 6 years old, respectively, Abby, Sarah, and Audrey have already begun paving their path to stardom, and have developed a signature sound playing country and folk music. Always smiling when on stage, "The Brown Sisters," have been bitten by the performance bug, and are eager to showcase their talents whenever the opportunity presents itself.

Audiences at the South Shore Arts Festival on the Common, a Cohasset baseball fund-raiser, a PSO fund-raiser, and the Appalachian Service Project festival, have all had the privi-

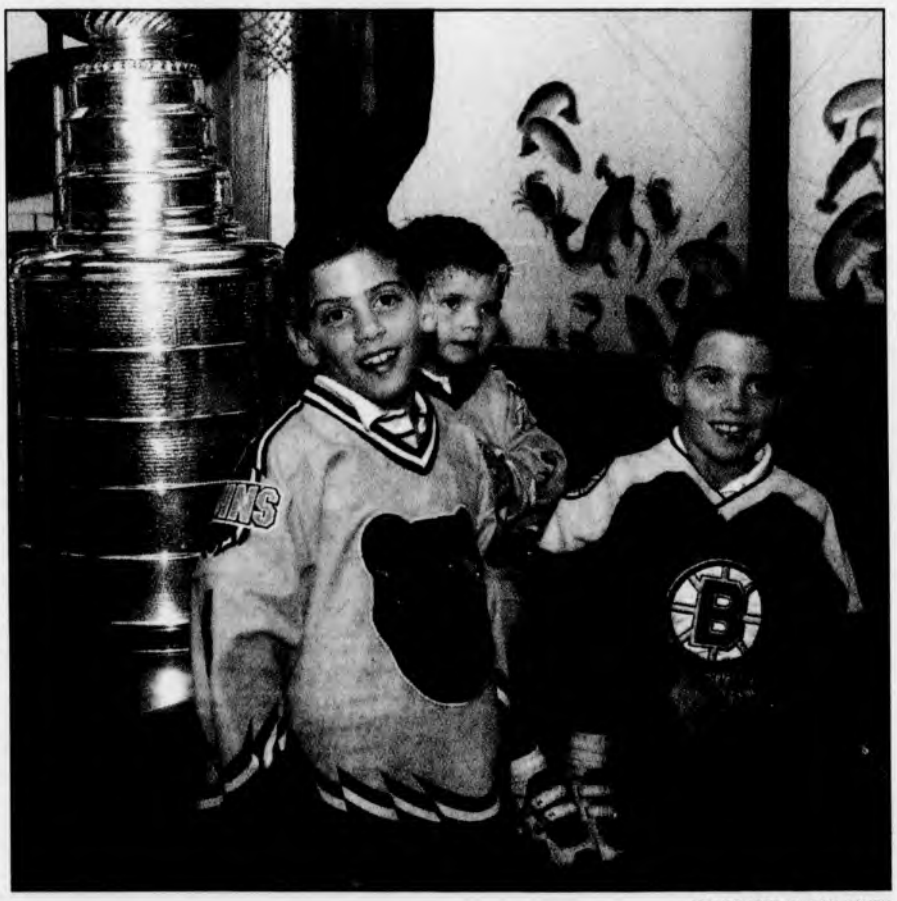
Hockey fans lineup for look at Stanley Cup

Trophy makes a Cohasset stop

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM



For Joe Buckley of Marshfield seeing the Stanley Cup after some 34 years was worth the wait. The setting was the Olde Salt House restaurant in Cohasset not Boston Garden and Bobby Orr — star of the then champion Boston Bruins — was no where to be found.

But the 90-minute wait in the rain Monday morning with hundreds of other hockey fans was no problem for Buckley and his grandson Benjamin LeBlanc, 8, a budding star on a Mite majors team.

"It's good for young people to see it," Buckley said, noting the last time he saw the Stanley Cup was in 1972 when the Bruins won the National Hockey League championship.

Steve Baker, a former NHL goalie and Cohasset resident, is a scout for the current league champions, Tampa Bay Lightning. Baker arranged to bring the Stanley Cup to town Monday for a private reception for family and friends at Atlantica restaurant, which is next door to the Olde Salt House. But he wanted to share it first with the "folks who never get a chance to get to Toronto."

Toronto is the home of the Hockey Hall of Fame museum where the Stanley Cup is housed when it's not on traveling all over North America, Europe, Russia and Japan. The Stanley Cup has even been a guest at the White House on several occasions.

Youth hockey players, Christopher, Matthew and Michael Lund pose with the Stanley Cup at the Olde Salt House on Monday.

"It's a magnet," Baker said about Stanley Cup drawing a crowd in Cohasset. "Last week in Raleigh, N.C., which is not so much a hockey town – everyone wanted their picture taken with the cup."

Walter Neubrand of the Hockey Hall of Fame is one of the "keepers of the cup" and accompanies the historic trophy, which dates back to 1893, on its travels. Neubrand explained the trophy, which weighs 34 pounds, is put in a case in regular baggage on flights. The current NHL champions are able to schedule special venues for the Stanley Cup throughout the summer.

Before its Cohasset stop – the Stanley Cup had already logged some miles this summer and, if it could talk, would have some interesting stories to tell.

Finding out where the wastewater flow goes

On tour at the treatment plant

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Capacity is at the heart of every Cohasset resident's plea to tie into town sewer, and the one building that holds that fate is the Cohasset Wastewater Treatment Plant.

Located at 43 Elm St., across from the Cohasset Fire Department, the plant is set back down a long paved driveway. Although there is much discussion in town about sewer issues, which all come back to what the plant can accommodate, it is likely many residents drive past it every day and never notice it is there.

"Wastewater by the textbook definition is 99.9 percent water."
— Richard Nye, chief operator

Richard Nye, chief operator for the Cohasset Wastewater Treatment Plant, knows the ins and outs of the plant better than anyone else. He is responsible for providing monthly operating reports to the Sewer Commission and conducting various tests to make sure Cohasset's wastewater is being treated properly. In addition, he monitors the machinery on site, and is there to make sure everything is constantly running smoothly.

Wastewater enters the plant and flows into a wet well. There is a building on top of the well, and an opening in the floor allows plant workers to look down inside. It is here that Nye collects influent water samples for his monthly reports.

Contrary to what might be assumed, there is no odor emanating from the site, including the wet well, which is the first step in the treatment process. "Wastewater by the textbook definition is 99.9 percent water," said Nye, adding many of the solids are diluted before the water even reaches the plant.

When a sample is taken from the well, Nye brings it back to his office which doubles as a lab. He tests the Biochemical Oxygen Demand, or BOD levels, as well as the Total Suspended Solids, or TSS.

Nye tracks daily flow levels, and has circular flow charts which record the gallons of wastewater used daily. He noted the flows have a sharp spike in the morning and again in the evenings, when people are getting ready to start their day, or are getting ready for bed. Nye said flows can vary from day to day, and often depend on the weather. He said when it rains, that can affect the flows, and sometimes it can take about a week for the numbers to go back down.

Influent water travels through a screening system that removes grit such as sand, coffee grinds, egg shells, and other solid material. The solids are separated and filtered through pipes to be bagged and taken to the dump.

The plant has a sludge thicken-

This week in COHASSET

Selectmen to meet Tuesday at 7:30 p.m.

The Board of Selectmen will meet Tuesday, July 13 at 7:30 p.m., at Town Hall. Expected items on the agenda include discussion with the MBTA, an update from the Village Revitalization Task Force, and discussion on a proposed Police Advisory Council. All are welcome to attend.

Grant application for Homeland Security

On Cohasset's behalf, Deputy Director of Emergency Management Glenn Pratt has submitted an application and the required documents to the Executive Office of Public Safety, to request $12,800 in funding through the Commonwealth's Homeland Security Local Preparedness Grant Program. Funding from previous grants has been used to update equipment at the police and fire stations, and prepare the town for emergency situations.

Drainage suggestions for James Brook area

On June 22, representatives from Tutela Engineering met with acting Town Manager Michael Buckley, to discuss the steps the town is taking to address drainage issues located in the downtown and other areas related to James Brook. The current drainage improvement contract only uses a portion of the funds in the mitigation agreement with the MBTA. Tutela has therefore developed a larger scale plan and has prioritized the recommendations for future improvements for the town's consideration.

Tutela believes the town should install a 48-inch pipe from the town parking area to the discharge of James Brook (located behind the Masonic Hall,) and the discharge channel should be improved to decrease the water surface level as much as possible, and relieve flooding near the post office. Tutela believes this work should take place as soon as possible, before construction to the downtown area is complete. The estimated cost would be between $300,000 and $400,000.

Tutela also suggests implementing a detention area at the entrance to the downtown area, which could hold off storm runoff for a period. The detention would allow for the gradual release of flow at a reduced rate over time. The proposed location would be at a point on James Brook, just below Sanctuary Pond, and the improvement would cost about $350,000.

Tutela also said it would recommend installing a storm water pumping facility to discharge flow at high flow conditions from the post office to Little Harbor, which would cost between $250,000 and $500,000.

Tutela will be available to meet with the town and discuss the improvements at length in the future.

E-mails focus of possible Open Meeting Law violations

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Although reprimanded once before for not complying with the Open Meeting Law, the Sewer Commission may again be in violation, as it has possibly been conducting business via e-mail which should be discussed at a public meeting.

In light of discussions which took place at the board's June 28 meeting, the Mariner has filed a complaint with the District Attorney's office, and has submitted a written request to the Sewer Commission for all copies of e-mails sent between members of the board regarding the Avalon, Cedarmere and the Cook Estate proposed developments. At the meeting, members of the board discussed e-mails they had sent to each other regarding bylaw changes the board was slated to vote on that night.

The board provided copies of two e-mails to the public, which had gone between the three members of the commission, Chairman Raymond Kasperowicz, John Beck, and Sean Cunning, a former member, Gary Vanderweil, Town Counsel Paul DeRensis, and engineering consultant Daniel Coughlin of Tutela Engineering Associates. One e-mail stated it was the third revision of a Home Rule Petition, and the other was a bylaw draft in its second revision. Former e-mails with additional drafts of the bylaws were not made available.

Beck responded to the Mariner's request and said he does not save e-mail other than the last copy that is of interest, and the rest have been discarded. He also said the commission, "did not use e-mail to make any decision. That is what the meetings are for."

However, in 2001, when the Mariner filed its first e-mail complaint with the District Attorney's office, then Assistant District Attorney Ellen McCusker Devlin said as a governmental body, the Sewer Commission is subject to the Open Meeting Law, and that the DA's office has previously found that the "Open Meeting Law is violated when e-mail conversations that relate to public business occur among a quorum of members of a governmental body. The use of e-mail communication for housekeeping matters, such as meeting scheduling and cancellations, would not be a violation of the Open Meeting Law. E-mail communications relating to public business should be avoided even where e-mails are sent on an individual basis, as individual e-mail conversations may reach a quorum of members without the knowledge of all participants."

"E-mail communications relating to public business should be avoided even where e-mails are sent on an individual basis, as individual e-mail conversations may reach a quorum of members without the knowledge of all participants."
— District Attorney's office

The DA's office also said the Open Meeting Law mandates that, "(A)ll meeting of a governmental body shall be open to the public," and that "no quorum of a governmental body shall meet in private for the purpose of deciding on or deliberating toward a decision on any matter..." Under the Open Meeting Law, "meetings" include discussion or consideration by a quorum of "any public business or public policy matter over which the governmental body has supervision, control, jurisdiction, or advisory power."

To remedy the situation, the DA's office instructed the commission to address the issue of e-mail communications and to communicate to the public that the commission will not utilize e-mail to discuss public business. However, it seems the commission has continued that practice.

Both bylaws drafted by the board could affect the proposed Avalon, Cedarmere, and Cook Estate developments, as all three are looking to come to a wastewater resolution for their projects. The commission has already denied sewer applications for Cedarmere and the Cook Estate, and Cedarmere has appealed that decision. Avalon was told there was no sewer capacity from the beginning, and that project has not filed a sewer application to date. However, the commission mentioned there has been talk about Town Meeting being given the power to decide whether to bring the Cook Estate into the central district, giving it sewer preferenee over the other two senior housing project which are not in the district, should adequate capacity be found at some point in the future.

The Home Rule Petition, which the board voted in favor of, will need Town Meeting approval to be formally adopted. If passed, it would amend the Cohasset Sewer Act to allow the commission to expand the sewer district, to encompass areas that would not otherwise be allowed to tie-in. If approved, the Sewer Commission could decide to let the Cook Estate into the central district. The second bylaw change would amend Article 9 of the current General Bylaws to prohibit the construction of sewers in public roads outside the central district, which would allow the commission to deny projects such as Avalon, which has floated the idea of laying pipes down Route 3A to tie into Hull's capacity, the right to lay pipes in any Cohasset streets. The board is waiting to hear back from Town Counsel on the final wording of the bylaw.

The Sewer Commission is not the only town board under scrutiny for possibly violating the Open Meeting Law in recent weeks. The Board of Selectmen may have violated the Open Meeting Law June 24 when three of its five members attended a meeting, which was not posted, to discuss the James Brook Flood Control Project. Members Ronnie McMorris, Ralph Dormitzer, and Fred Koed attended, as did Town Manager Michael Buckley, Building Inspector Robert Egan, and representatives from the Federal Emergency Management Agency and the Waterfield Design Group.

Finding out where the Cohasset wastewater flow goes er mechanism where microscopic bugs live that eat the matter that comes into the plant. "It's my job to make sure their environment is good," Nye said, and if necessary, he will take measures to remove some of the bugs from the system. Sludge is disposed of off site.

Cohasset's treatment plant has a Zenon membrane water filtration system that uses air to force particles through the membrane fibers. The membranes are located in two large tanks, and wastewater is constantly flowing into the tank through a pipe. The membrane fibers look like long, thin, plastic tubes, which have a hole in the center, like a very thin straw. There are tiny holes along the outside walls of the fibers as well, which allow water to pass through. The plant has three pumps, of which two are regularly used and the third is a backup. The pumps act as a little vacuum in the tank, which help push air through fibers in the membrane filters, sucking water from the outside of the membrane, in, filtering solids out in the process. The result of the air forcing water through the membranes is a frothy sea of bubbling wastewater in the holding tanks below.

Nye said the plant has 12 total membranes, with six in each of its two tanks. There are three cassettes in each tank, which are the determining factor for capacity. When the plant was upgraded in 2000, two of its six cassettes were reserved for Little Harbor, but those have had to be implemented to handle the wastewater the plant currently takes in. While the Zenon operator's manual says the plant equipment can handle an average daily flow of 400,000 gallons of wastewater per day, Cohasset is only permitted by the Environmental Protection Agency and Department of Environmental Protection to discharge 300,000 gallons per day of effluent.

Nye said much of the problem with capacity has to do with inflow and infiltration, or I&I. With heavy rains or high tides, flows dramatically increase. He said the best way to fix the problem would be to install new pipes around town, because fixing the old pipes usually leads to chasing more leaks down the road. If the town had a maintenance budget to keep the pipes in good working order, that would greatly help the problem. In addition, if upgrades were done and cassettes that could handle more wastewater could be installed, that would also help the capacity issue.

When the water has successfully passed through the membranes, it passes under an ultraviolet light to be disinfected, and is discharged from the plant. Samples of the effluent are taken often, and Nye tests its PH in the lab.

The Community has worked very hard to ensure the Wastewater Treatment Plant not only does its job, but fits in well with its surroundings, he said. Because the plant can be seen from St. Anthony's Church, the Historical Society Building, and dozens of private homes, a group of residents got together in 2001 shortly after the plant's upgrade, to form a beautification committee. The end result was a new coat of paint for the buildings, additional windows, and new plantings. There are also two pergolas, one atop the generator — which runs on natural gas — and another on the back portion of the main treatment building. There is a spectacular view from top of the treatment building, which overlooks Jacob's Meadow, and Nye said wildlife is flourishing as he has seen foxes and blue heron out in the marsh.

Sisters sing their way into your heart

lege of hearing these young sisters in concert. But while the girls may enjoy being able to share something they love with the rest of the community, and the applause they receive for a job well done, their mother Angela Brown said it's all about having fun, and not the attention they receive.

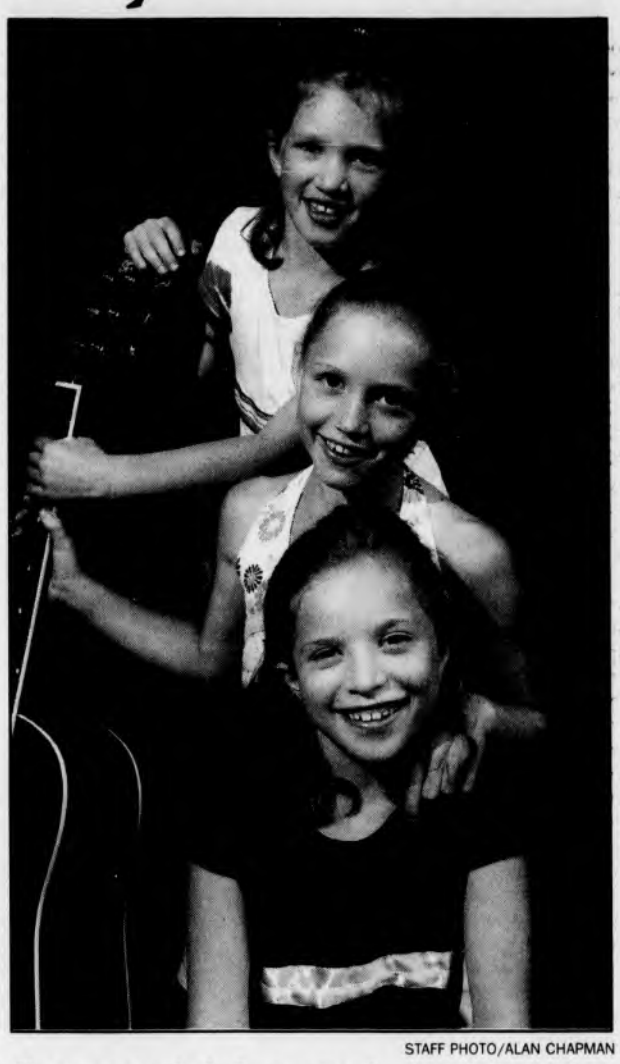
"It's not about being a star," said Angela, adding performing is something the girls are really interested in right now and enjoy, and she and her husband Mitch will help foster that dream for as long as its fun. She said if the three can gain confidence and stage presence through performing at a young age, that is a skill they will be able to carry with them for the rest of their lives, in whatever they choose to do.

"They get better and better every week."
— Jim Armstrong, guitar teacher

In addition to singing, the girls all recently began playing guitar. Angela said in the three short months since the girls began practicing with guitar teacher Jim Armstrong, he has really gotten them "fired up" about studying music and performing. She said the girls have begun branching out into other instruments and have been showing wonderful progress. Sarah has taken to the mandolin, and Abby has begun playing the steel string guitar, which gives the group a real Nashville sound.

Armstrong said he sees himself as someone who can hopefully serve as a mentor for the girls, and help direct them in their abilities. The real initiative always comes from them, and they are constantly coming to practice with new songs they'd like to learn. "They get better and better every week," he said, adding it's very impressive to see the enthusiasm they continue to have with their music.

The girls continually practice their music and Armstrong says it is a rare occasion that any one of them has pre-performance jitters. "They practice hard and are confident in their abilities," he said, but always having either Armstrong or his twin brother Joe who is also a guitar teacher, playing behind them on stage helps.



In addition to playing guitar, the girls also take piano lessons, as does their brother Nate, who is Abby's twin. "They're all very musical," said Angela. In fact, Nate said one day he would like to be the drummer for his sisters, or possibly their road manager when they make it big.

But before the Browns hit the road for Nashville, they will have to gain experience at the local level. The girls have already signed on to play for two weeks in September during the Farmer's Market on the Common. Armstrong also said this holiday season, he intends to contact some local nursing homes where the girls can perform for the residents. "We'll play some older classics," during those concerts, he said, so the audience can sing along.

The girls also have a larger short-term goal to hopefully serve as a "warm-up act" for one of their favorite artists within the next two to three years. Armstrong said the Music Circus sometimes hires local acts to perform for roughly 15 minutes prior to the main attraction, and the girls would love to go on stage before artists like Vince Gill or Alison Kraus. Armstrong said he and his brother, "will be behind them all the way."

Aside from music, all four Brown children love playing sports, and Nate recently hosted his own lacrosse clinic for children in kindergarten through grade two. Almost every sport is covered between all four children, including swimming, soccer, basketball, baseball, ice skating, skiing, and biking. Nate said someday, he would like to ride in the Tour de France.

But for now, music is taking center stage in the lives of the Brown sisters, and the three will continue to receive abundant encouragement from their family. "We're all given our special gifts, and these little people all have a special gift," said Angela, adding they are lucky they've been given the opportunity to share it.

DiNero's serves up expansion plans as it will enable DiNero's to host small functions and gatherings without having to close the entire restaurant to the public. Parking will be reconfigured to aid the flow of traffic as well.

Currently there are 70 seats at DiNero's, and that number would be increased to roughly 93 with the new expansion. "Right now, the tables are on top of each other," said Dave Mackwell, of Kelly Engineering, who has been hired to work with the owners on the design, and with the expansion, tables throughout the restaurant will have more space between them. The new function room will have ample windows looking out over stone ledge, and can be used for a variety of private parties, and sliding dividers will be installed to set the private functions apart. Mackwell said two new restrooms will be constructed near the new addition, and the current restrooms will remain where they are.

The aesthetics of the building will also be improved, and Mackwell said windows on the original building will be replaced as well as the outside canopy. A new exposed aggregate walkway will be installed outside for accessibility. "Everyone can use it," from the elderly to the handicapped, he said.

One concern voiced by the board was the possibility of additional light and noise from the site, and how that will impact abutters.

With the addition of roughly 700 square feet to the restaurant, there will be a need for additional parking. When Mackwell came before the planning board for an informal discussion regarding the proposed plans on June 23, the board was excited at the prospect of changing the parking configuration on site, as it has been very problematic in the past. DiNero's is located in West Corner at 235 Hull St., and virtually sits on the road. With the current parking configuration, patrons have needed to back up onto the street, which isn't the safest means of exiting the site.

Currently, there are 27 spaces striped for parking, but they are more narrow than what the town requires, and many times patrons do not fill every space for fear of having someone else open their car door and bump into them. Mackwell said the new spaces will comply with the width and length criteria of the town, and will be configured differently in the lot to help prevent crowding and help enable the flow of traffic, as well as keep patrons from having to back out into the street. The new configuration will have 37 total spaces, of which two are set aside for the apartment located above the restaurant, which is four more than the restaurant is required to have.

One concern voiced by the board was the possibility of additional light and noise from the site, and how that will impact abutters. Mackwell said every precaution will be taken to ensure lighting from the site has the least amount of impact on abutters as is possible, and has agreed to look into the potential noise air conditioners and other appliances could cause. Abutters in attendance said they were concerned about the dumpster which currently sits on site, and that issue will also be addressed as plans move forward.

Developers will have to submit a formal site plan review to the planning board for its approval, and members said they will each visit the site to get a better understanding of what the proposed changes could entail. The planning board will take the issue up again once a formal site plan is filed.

Mill River awaits court decision

Planning board ruling appealed

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Mill River contends for the site plan review process, the planning board has been given enough information and to deny the application oversteps its authority.

Although the planning board denied the site plan submitted by Mill River Boatyard LLC, which would have allowed for the renovation of three buildings at the Mill River Boatyard site on Border Street, developers have chosen not to accept the verdict and are appealing the board's decision.

The Mill River appeal states that by denying the site plan for a full-service boatyard, complete with hauling, launching, storage and repair facilities, the planning board has overstepped its jurisdiction. Mill River alleges the discretion exercised by the planning board in its decision is an "abuse of power and in excess of their authority in that a planning board does not have discretion in a site plan approval process."

On May 26, the planning board voted 3-0 against approval of the site plan, stating it thought the applicant had not provided enough information regarding the site's intended use, along with a failure to meet the parking requirement set forth in the town's bylaw and a failure to meet public safety requirements. Planning Board Chairman Al Moore recused himself from all conversations surrounding the project, and member Michael Westcott was on vacation when the decision was made. The formal filing of the board's decision was completed on June 1, and the appeal was filed June 17 in Norfolk Superior Court.

Of main concern to the board was the fact that it felt the applicant did not provide enough information for it to thoroughly understand the nature and extent of the proposed use of the buildings on site. During the public hearing, member Stuart Ivimey said the preliminary plans allowed for every possible permitted use, including uses only allowed with special permits, and there is a much wider scope the site could be used for, which was not specified by the applicant. He said it is not the job of the board to figure out what the applicant may or may not do with the property.

However, Mill River contends for the site plan review process, the planning board has been given enough information and to deny the application oversteps its authority and is "beyond their legal capacity to determine zoning questions." Mill River believes their plans may not require site plan approval at all because they are planning a reconstruction of a non-conforming use, which they say will not increase or change the use of the building, and therefore does not require a special permit.

The planning board was also concerned about parking on the site and their denial states the applicants repeatedly stated they would not establish parking facilities on the property. The planning board has said the renovation of the buildings will no doubt increase the flow of traffic to the site and will require parking for both employees and those who use the services at the boatyard. However, the applicant states they have no obligation to create additional parking on site, because the plans are to only reconstruct existing buildings which will be virtually the same size. They believe the board's finding that the applicant needs to establish parking on site is "an unreasonable and illegal demand," because there is no requirement to provide it under the zoning bylaws.

Other issues for the site the planning board felt were outstanding include the fact that the property is in the flood plain, and the buildings have been deteriorating for a sufficient enough length of time to cause any grandfathered rights to lapse. However, the applicant has said there will not be anything on site that does not have sufficient permits and the state has additional requirements for marine use they will have to abide by.

Currently, the Mill River Boatyard is owned by Peter Roy of Margin Street, who also owns Atlantica, the Olde Salt House and the Cohasset Harbor Inn. Donald Staszko is in the process of working out a deal to purchase the Mill River Boatyard from Roy, and Staszko's son Ryan would serve as the manager of the property upon successful renovations. The Border Street site covers approximately 40,631 square feet of land, and has operated as a boatyard for more than 100 years, although the current condition of the buildings on site has greatly limited the work that has gone on at the site.

There are three main buildings on site, including the "Eastwick" building, renamed after its role in the 1987 film "The Witches of Eastwick," which is the closest building to the Border Street bridge; the main building, which has three floors and houses a workshop for boat repairs at ground level; and the Lobster Pound, which is the only structurally sound building on the site, but is in need of sprucing up. The Quonset Hut, which would be rebuilt as part of the plans, collapsed this winter.

South Shore Charter School renovations moving forward

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

The building is 53,000 square-feet and sits on six acres of wooded landscape.

The South Shore Charter School is entering phase two of its renovation plan and officials there said the school should be ready to open to grades K-12 on Sept. 9 at 100 Longwater Drive in Norwell.

Phase two of the renovation, which entails converting 114 small offices into 28 classrooms, is being funded through a $2.2 million bond secured through MassDevelopment.

"We closed on the bond about two weeks ago," said South Shore Charter School Executive Director Michael Munhall. "That's all we can afford to borrow right now. It won't complete the whole building but it will allow us to complete phase two of the project. It'll let us get the classrooms ready that we'll need for September."

Munhall explained phase one of the project included doing some code updates, knocking down some walls and getting the high school into the building, which cost about $275,000. Phase three is not really planned at this point, but Munhall said it will include doing some upgrades to the school's library, as well as the music and art rooms.

The South Shore Charter School announced the $5.5 million purchase of a building at 100 Longwater Drive this past December.

According to a release from the school, "the financing for the $5.5 million purchase was provided by the National Cooperative Bank and Development Corporation...the U.S. Department of Agriculture, through its rural development program, guaranteed the loan."

Munhall said the building at Longwater Drive was formerly Serono Pharmaceuticals and was owned by the iStar Corporation of Atlanta, Georgia. He added the building has been empty for about two years and said the charter school finally approached iStar about buying the building last winter. The building is 53,000 square-feet and sits on six acres of wooded landscape.

The charter school was formerly located in Hull and was comprised of three separate buildings — an old aquarium, a former bank and a former restaurant. Munhall said students will be vacating the bank building because the lease is up and noted there will be some shuffling of students in Hull before they move to Norwell in the fall. He added once all the students move to Norwell, the Hull chapter of the school will be no more.

"School finished up on June 23," Munhall said, indicating the Longwater Drive building was used this year but did not incorporate all the grades. "Now we have to vacate the building for the next two months so all the renovations can be done. We'll be moving out of the Hull buildings on Sept. 1 so that we can be ready for the opening of school on Sept. 9.

"As far as I can tell, we are actually ahead of schedule with this project. Phase one was completed in February and phase two is right on target. But with construction, you never know what's going to happen. You just hope everything goes well. And so far, everything has gone fine."

Munhall said it hasn't only been the construction process that's been moving along smoothly.

"The whole thing, the whole purchase has really gone about as flawlessly as you can imagine," he said. "When we stated our goal was to open in Norwell in September of 2004, a lot of people said, 'There's no way you can do that.' Well, it looks like we're going to do it. The rest of the phases will be done this summer but phase two is by far the most significant part."

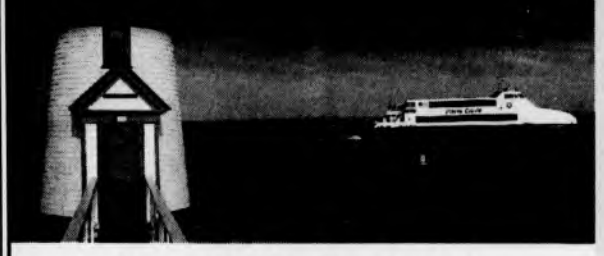
Munhall said sometime in September or October, there will be a ceremony marking the official opening of the school. He added students who were at the Norwell location this year will notice some real improvements.

"This year at the Longwater Drive location was crowded, kind of cramped," he said. "It's going to be more spacious and all the classes are going to be in one building for the first time in out 10-year history. We'll have about 100 more students in there come the fall." He added there will be a total of 468 students in the school.

"In many ways, we'll be bringing some of the old traditions with us from Hull," Munhall said. "But we'll also be creating some new ones, seeing how we'll all be in one building for the first time. The faculty will be able to work as a unit on a daily basis so I can imagine the things we'll be able to do."

Munhall said as anticipation for the new, completed charter school grows, so has the amount of applications coming in from students who would like to attend the facility.

"We've had a huge increase in applications," he said. "Since February, we've gotten 100 applications and that's just amazing. People are also calling us, asking us for information on a daily basis."



Munhall said the bottom line is that this project was never even given a chance to succeed and now it's becoming a reality.

"A lot of people didn't give this charter school a chance to exist 10 years ago," he said. "We've had some ups and downs, like any organization. But now, we're here and we'll have a facility that will last 100 years. There's a need for a school like ours and that shows through the drastic increase in applications."

"Good Enough" Is Never Good Enough

Richard H. Aubut, RN
President and Chief Executive Officer

Recent news reports may have you wondering: "What is going on at South Shore Hospital?"

The answer is simple. We care for more than 150,000 patients each year. And some of them are frustrated because they expected their South Shore Hospital experience to be better. They want what any of us would want: for their concerns to be heard and for us to be responsive.

And we are being responsive. In the weeks ahead, you will read messages in this newspaper about all that we are doing to anticipate and respond to your most pressing health care needs, questions, and concerns.

As patients, we expect our hospital experiences to be perfect. On the other hand, we know intellectually that this expectation is unrealistic. Medicine is complex. Individuals respond differently to the very same treatments. Doctors differ in how they help patients heal. And hospital employees bring unique talents, perspectives, and experiences to their tasks.

Regardless, we know that our first priority is to keep our patients safe. We use elaborate, redundant, and expensive mechanisms to minimize the risk of error. But no system is foolproof. Caregivers are human beings and human beings are not perfect. That doesn't mean that we don't strive for perfection every day — and in every way. At South Shore Hospital, we don't believe that "good enough" is ever good enough.

When things don't go as they should, we exhaustively investigate every detail of what happened and why — including how to avoid it happening again. We employ physicians and other professionals who are devoted to preventing potential problems and promptly fixing systems when challenges arise.

Our 3,400 employees, 700 medical staff members, and 450 volunteers are focused on one goal: to provide each patient with a quality health care experience at all stages of life — from birthing to hospice care; emergency to intensive care. Overwhelmingly, we succeed. Every day we hear positive comments from our patients. Independently administered satisfaction surveys show that nine of ten patients would recommend our hospital to others. Eight of ten patients would recommend our emergency care.

I appreciate the outpouring of support from so many of you who credit us with saving your lives, restoring your health, easing your pain, and comforting your loved ones at the end of their lives. And to everyone associated with our hospital: thank you for your daily dedication and professionalism.

It is frustrating to read recent headlines. Since we have an ethical and legal responsibility to maintain patient confidentiality, those news stories were one-sided. We will not debate the specifics of our patients' care — no matter the impact on our hospital.

Our mission is clear: South Shore Hospital exists to benefit the people of our region by promoting good health and by healing, caring, and comforting. We know that the people of our region depend upon us. That's why your thoughts about how we can improve are so important to us.

Please let us know what's on your mind. You can either contact one of our patient advocates at (781) 340-8888, or by email at advocacy@sshosp.org. You can also write to me personally at 55 Fogg Road, South Weymouth, MA 02190.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Email meetings

We've long suspected that illegal email meetings are being conducted among members of boards and committees in town. The technology makes it so easy to do.

One board member sends another some information for comment; that member in turn sends it along to another board member and so on. Before you know it, a quorum of the board has conducted an illegal meeting completely online.

With that being said, we're also convinced most town officials don't realize that emailing one another about town business other than scheduling changes and the like is a violation of the Open Meeting Law.

In fact, sewer commissioner John Beck stated in an email to us that meetings are where decisions are made. We couldn't agree with him more, but the fact of the matter is the general public has the right to be part of the discussion leading up to a decision. Otherwise, decisions have a sneaky way of becoming "done deals" excluding citizens from the process.

We understand the Open Meeting Law can be damn inconvenient when email makes the exchange of information so fast and seamless. But the public's right to know what its government is doing is paramount.

Here at the Mariner, we believe email is the biggest challenge facing enforcement of the Open Meeting Law. So much of it is easily deleted, leaving no paper trail to follow. All emails among governmental bodies and officials — and those they communicate with — should be printed out and become part of the particular board's correspondence files, but that is rarely the case. Citizens should be able to go to Town Hall and examine email and other correspondence without difficulty.

It's important to point out, however, that sending a letter or document via email is OK but discussing the contents of that letter over email is not. The contents should be discussed in a meeting that is open to the public with copies available for the audience.

On a related matter, subcommittees are also subject to the Open Meeting Law and must post their meetings 48 hours in advance. It doesn't matter if the public or press intends to show up – the posting is required just in case someone wants to attend for whatever reason.

Needless to say, we are huge proponents of the Open Meeting Law. It's a friend to the taxpayer. Open government is a right we all share. We need to treasure and protect that right even when it's cumbersome and those working behind closed doors or on email have the best of intentions.

Straits Pond through the years and seasons

The Straits Pond Watershed Association (SPWA) is putting a call out to individuals and/or community groups seeking video footage, digital photos, or regular photos of scenes of Straits Pond. They are seeking scenes from Straits Pond through the years. They are also looking for photos taken over the coming year showing Straits Pond through the four seasons.

The association hopes to, over the course of the year, gather enough material from different views around the Pond to put together a photo collage/video of "Straits Pond Through the Years and Seasons".

Save 3 Teachers fund

TO THE EDITOR:

The Committee to Save 3 Teachers is proud to announce that we currently have approximately $61,000 in checks, auction proceeds and pledges. We are very close to paying for two teachers' salaries for the coming school year. We clearly need everyone who has pledged to come forward with their donations and for others who have neither pledged nor given to please support this important effort now. Several generous families have written second checks to help us meet the $70,000 we need for two teachers. If there are others who would be willing to do so, any additional support would be gratefully appreciated. Our deadline is July 15. That is only a week away. Please give as generously as you can by writing a check to the Cohasset Education Foundation, and mailing it to 272 N. Main St.

We also have several auction items still up for bid. Make us an offer! Send your bid to bbuckley1@comast.net for the following items: sunset canoe trip on Lily Pond; SAT prep software/books; research assistance for a middle/high school writing assignment (perfect for the fall!); winterization of 150HP outboard motor; sports memorabilia appraisal; signed San Jose Sharks helmet; signed Brendan Shanahan photo; $200 BeadCombers gift certificate; signed Sergio Garcia shirt; or a signed Jasper Parnevick shirt. One hundred percent of these proceeds will benefit the fund.

Many thanks to all those who have supported our efforts.

Sewer commission is not on a power trip

TO THE EDITOR:

When I read last week's article [Flexing muscle over sewer hookups; Sewer commission seeks more power] I was shocked by the slant the paper put on what we are trying to accomplish with our two proposed articles for the fall Town Meeting.

We are not trying to increase the power of the sewer commission, flexing our muscles or attempting to reign supreme. Neither article will give the sewer commission any more authority or responsibility than we have already. What they will accomplish, if passed by Town Meeting, is to put the strategic, decision-making authority for wastewater management with Town Meeting.

Town Meeting will decide who is in which sewer district and who is not. Those who are not in a Town Meeting defined sewer district will not be allowed to be considered for a hook-up, period. Those properties which are in a Town Meeting defined sewer district will be considered for hook-ups by the sewer commission as capacity will allow. This is no different than is the case today regarding the authority and responsibility of the sewer commission.

What will be different is that once the "town rule" petition is approved by the legislature and in effect, it will be state law, and no one will be allowed to sue the town or sewer commission if they disagree with decisions made by the sewer commission (assuming the decision is consistent with the town rule provisions). It will allow Cohasset to thoughtfully and strategically deal with wastewater planning using our Town Meeting process without having to be involved in lengthy and expensive lawsuits when a developer doesn't get its way.

For example, if the board of selectmen chooses to include the Cook property in the Central Sewer District as presented to Town Meeting, then the Town Meeting vote will decide. If Cook is in the Central Sewer District it will be considered for a hook-up as capacity will allow. This is equally true for any other property or developer who can convince Town Meeting that they should be included in a Town Meeting defined sewer district.

I'm sure you will recall that Chairman Kasperowicz has said from the beginning of the current litigation brought by the Cedarmere developers, that they should consider going to Town Meeting, as was the case for the Little Harbor/Atlantic Avenue Sewer District. At Town Meeting, Cedarmere developers would have the opportunity to convince the voters that their property deserves to be considered ahead of any other potential hook-ups. When they were denied a connection because of capacity limitations, they chose to file a lawsuit and put their hopes in the hands of a judge, instead of letting the voters decide. Our proposed articles, when both are in effect, will prevent future lawsuits of this kind.

Proud Cohasset native takes issue with letter

TO THE EDITOR:

Regarding Mark Bell's letter (Research lawsuits) to the Editor on June 16, I respectfully respond:

Yes, Cohasset has some problems and it has been published in the press and everyone read about it, Big deal!

The town manager resigned. Did anyone really think he would be around here forever, with his attitude? It was only a matter of time, I knew it and so did most others that are involved. I do think the Selectmen should tell the tax payers exactly why he resigned, it's everyone's business not just a chosen few.

Also, regarding frivolous political law suits and their costs, I agree, currently I have a Superior Court suit pending against the town regarding one of my Cohasset properties so I acknowledge your presumption that politics are alive and well in Cohasset, and probably every other town and city in America, including Westfield, I'm sure.

However, Cohasset is a special place, inhabited by special people. It's like a large family, my family for five generations. All families and most people occasionally do have problems, it's life. I'm sure you wouldn't publicly demean a member of your family if they had problems. Also, you wouldn't move away and publicly demean them be telling them you were glad about moving away.

You know, Mark, maybe, just maybe, you and a few others who still live in Cohasset, and feel as you do, just might not belong here! I love Cohasset and I'm certainly not going anywhere. I'm sure these problems will soon be a thing of the past and we'll all move on to the next challenges that await us in beautiful Cohasset.

Take multi-pronged, strong stance with MBTA

TO THE EDITOR:

Mr. Gruber provided the Mariner with a copy of the following letter he sent to the Cohasset Board of Selectmen:

Last evening (6/29/04) as I sat through the Board's review of the Greenbush project I was amazed at the naive view that the Board of Selectmen is taking in representing the Town on the Greenbush project. Lessons learned during the mitigation process seem to have been totally forgotten.

For about four years I was involved with the Cohasset Greenbush Mitigation Committee. We were a dedicated diverse group of volunteers that struggled, on behalf of the Town, through all of the MBTA negotiation intricacies leading up to the Town's mitigation agreement. Anyone involved with this project would easily remember that the MBTA is not a benevolent organization. The T's objectives were to build a rail project on time, at and the lowest possible cost. Cohasset's objectives were to protect our citizens throughout this massive project. These two objectives are definitely not the same.

As an example of the MBTA's difference of objectives, during the mitigation process and after years of negotiations, Cohasset and the MBTA arrived at a complete written mitigation package. Within 24 hours the T came back in and completely removed the entire mitigation package from the table and said we'd have to start over. Why? Someone at the MBTA decided that the negotiated package was not in the T's best interest. That was not good faith by a long shot. Similar actions were repeated by the MBTA over and over during the mitigation process, at the Section 106 hearings at the Army Corps of Engineers and during the Citizens Advisory Committee (a group formed by the

Put the Cook Estate project on hold

COMMENTARY

RICHARD BROOKS

If it sounds too good to be true, it always is too good to be true! That's the Cook Estate development plan in a nutshell! I am speaking out on the very controversial direction that some Town officials now wish to take with this Cook Estate saga in my hope that we can void another "bump" in the Town's road that has the potential to be the granddaddy "bump" of recent times.

If common sense, fair play, and official judgments are not made consistent with the best interests of our citizens, the will of the people, the existing court orders, prior Town commitments to our citizens, to the federal EPA, and to the state DEP, and the transcending environmental issues involved, then all heck is going to break out and the lawyers are going to have a field day!

The big losers, as always, will be the taxpaying citizens of our great Town, and Lord knows, those taxes are already way too high with no end in sight.

Firstly, let me clear up several misconceptions that have been fostered about the Cook Estate development plan:

1) It is not a housing development for low income senior citizens not at all. Zero!

2) It is not a housing development with extensive preferences for existing Cohasset residents and seniors; only about 20 percent of the about 100 units will give preferences to Cohasset citizens, citizens who have "moderate incomes" and meet the income tests. The balance of the units will be "market rate" rentals or purchases. I don't think my info here is in error. If it is, correct me and I'll apologize.

3) Clearly, a developed Cook Estate will add to the Town's tax base, net of any costs for Town services that may need to be increased. This is positive. As far as any "profit' that may result from the transaction, such profit will arise from the Town's simultaneous sale of a parcel of land contiguous to the Estate property which, I believe, appraised at $1.3 million. We need to know the Town's cost basis for that parcel, if any, to judge the amount of profit (capital gain?) obtained.

The amount of any profit is now eroding as the Town's costs to complete the deal are increasing.

Secondly, at last fall's Town Meeting, both the then Town Manager and the Selectmen's Chairman assured the voters present that the testing showed the septic could be handled on-site using conventional, in-ground technology. Without this assurance, the project would have, by necessity, been voted down because there currently is no extra capacity at the Central Wastewater Treatment Plant. Any extra capacity arising from the current plant/system upgrades has already been long committed to ending Cohasset's decades of polluting the Town's coastal waters under a Court Consent Order involving the DEP and the federal EPA, and, finally, other developers have already recently been denied use of any new capacity. Further, the Cook Estate is not included in the Central Sewer District-and this is also a strong barrier!

However, it was not long after Town Meeting and project approval (involving $4.5 million of taxpayer funds) that word came out the on-site septic was not viable and other "solutions" would be needed to keep going with the project!

I have seen no explanation of the what/how/why the pre-vote site testing was no longer valid. Was that testing thoroughly and properly done to support the assurances given at Town Meeting to vote for the project? Was the Board of Health involved or the DEP consulted? It would be useful for an explanation to be provided, otherwise we might start to conclude some bad things! I am, and I'm sure others in Town are as well, technically able to understand and have the experience to interpret the facts. In the interests of transparency, the info on this flawed testing or erroneous interpretation/extrapolation should be published.

Continuing on, other local sites were evaluated to be used for the in-ground septic treatment via piping the wastewater to a qualified site, but none tested were determined to be suitable. To me, in retrospect, given the latest proposal for disposition of the wastewater, it's not a big surprise that none of those tested were found to be suitable!

At this stage, I believe the Cook Estate project should be put on hold and brought back to a special or the next Town Meeting for review, with all options and cost changes discussed and with a new vote pro/con by the taxpayers. This is predicated by the fact that many who voted to go ahead with the project voted yes to a set of circumstances, costs, conditions, etc., that are no longer valid! The Town has no mandate to proceed under these changed circumstances. Already a furor is developing over proposals of how to proceed, and some of those proposals are simply unacceptable, if not outrageous, to many voters and reflect chaos waiting to inundate us!

The amount of any profit is now eroding as the Town's costs to complete the deal are increasing.

The tough questions have to be asked: Was it always the "plan" to tie in the Cook Estate development to the Town's sewer system, or was this an existing back-up plan should on site septic treatment prove unfeasible? If such a lengthy tie-in pipeline was ever constructed, who would pay for it and are there any other properties along the route of the pipeline that would also become candidates for tie-in?

Allow me to explain why such a tie-in to the Town's sewer system for the Cook property is unacceptable:

The Town of Cohasset, over the past several years, has voted and spent close to $500,000 for the committed development of a sewer system for the Little Harbor area to end the decades of coastal water pollution, and to also end the potential for neighborhood health problems due to all of the obsolete and failed septic systems in the area. This project, by word and action and reports to the court, the federal EPA, the state DEP, and the area citizens, is geared to use the expected new Central Treatment Plant additional capacity arising from all of the plant/system upgrades in progress, mostly funded by the money mentioned above, but also supported by a lot of sweat equity volunteered by the Little Harbor area citizens. There are well over 400 residences involved, and they have been waiting for years to get this sewer system relief, all the while paying taxes for all of the other Town projects.

To further comply with the longstanding court order to stop the pollution, Cohasset submitted a "Final Action Plan" on Aug. 30, 2000, wherein initiatives were presented with the focus on sewering the Little Harbor area. Since that time, all of the funding and work have been in support of the sewer expansion to cover the Little Harbor/Atlantic Avenue area. The funding approaches $500,000 as mentioned above. To supplement all of this work, the Little Harbor area citizens organized as the Citizens for Equitable Solution ("CEES"), and have been heavily involved over the past several years, especially providing citizens input and sweat equity to assist the Sewer Commission in its development work. It is clearly understood between the citizens of the Little Harbor/Atlantic Avenue area and involved Town officials that additional capacity developed at the central plant, projections of which approximately match the area needs for a sewer system, are committed to that sewer expansion. This understanding has been in place for several years now and all of the work has been in support of that initiative!

In December of 2003, the Deputy Regional Engineer, Bureau of Resource Protection, Department of Environmental Protection requested from Cohasset's then Town Manager a detailed update, status, and projected schedule for implementation of the August, 2000 Cohasset "Final Action Plan." In response, on behalf of Cohasset, a detailed report was submitted just this past February, the entire focus of which was on the central plant/system upgrades (to provide the needed capacity) and the initial studies, layouts, surveys, preliminary engineering, etc., for the central sewer system expansion to serve the Little Harbor/Atlantic Avenue area. The detailed project schedule, an integral portion of that report, details all of the legal, permitting, etc., steps leading to the large construction funding appropriation in the spring of 2006, construction bidding process in late 2006, and the awarding of construction contracts in early 2007, with the tie-ins to the eligible area residences starting in 2008.

But wait! It appears that some Selectmen, at least the Chairman, have something else in mind. Within the past few days, the Chairman proposed that the Town give that sewer capacity to the Cook Estate commercial developer and tie in to the Cohasset central plant. In this proposal, he suggests that the Town can eventually build another wastewater treatment plant to allow the sewering of Little Harbor/Atlantic Avenue to take place.

English translation: The Cook project, to provide housing to about 100 families, up to 80 percent of which will be new residents to Cohasset who will have never paid a nickel in taxes in the Town, is to jump to the top of the wait list for sewer capacity, and the long-awaited sewering of Little Harbor's 400+ families can be further postponed until someday when the Town can afford to build a new, second treatment plant, with most of the $500,000 spent to upgrade the existing plant going now to the benefit of the developer and the new families that occupy the 100 units! The Selectmen Chairman feels that we can vote this proposal at Town Meeting so as to allow the Cook project to proceed, including voting the Cook property into the Central Sewer District.

Allow me to understate and characterize this proposal as a major betrayal which is unacceptable. I believe that most citizens will find it unacceptable, along with the court, the EPA, the DEP, etc. The Chairman may feel he is looking out for the best interests of the Town, but the best interests of Cohasset are the best interests of the taxpaying citizens. What other interests are being looked out for which are not visible at this time?

Let the developer of the Cook Estate build a new, on-site wastewater treatment plant!

Before the potential firestorm of lawsuits, court orders, taxpayer revolts, charges, and countercharges erupts on our Town, I have suggested to the head of CEES that it could be most useful and productive to invite the Chairman of the Board of Selectmen to meet with a half-dozen or so CEES members to discuss his proposal of sewering the Cook project. I hope that such a meeting is promptly arranged. Woe to all of us if the escalating polarization is allowed to develop into its potential full-blown size!

FYI, my property on Nichols Road is equipped with a relatively new, biological "FAST" septic system. I have no dire personal need to tie into a sewer system, but I certainly will join with all of my Little Harbor neighbors to stop the pollution of the beautiful Cohasset coastal areas, especially Little Harbor, and to eliminate the potential for community health problems, especially with our children, that my extensive professional training and experience tells me is a real threat. I'm sure the Cohasset Board of Health is aware of what I speak and shares my concerns.

The entire Little Harbor area, with its bountiful amount of ledge, is not friendly to the proper functioning of on-site septic systems, especially with so many of the existing systems being quite old, obsolete, openly failed, way too close to the coastal waters, and out of compliance with Title V requirements.

It is not surprising at all that most homes which are sold in the Little Harbor/Atlantic Avenue area require construction of new, very expensive septic systems. A sewer system is urgently needed. The Cook property has no urgency whatsoever, and the existing court order makes that very clear.

Richard E. T. Brooks, Ph.D., P.E., lives at 68 Nichols Road.

Summers at Paragon Park

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The weather was so nice last week that I decided to take a trip to one of my old stamping grounds, Nantasket Beach. I wish I hadn't.

The main parking lot, usually jammed with cars on a hot summer weekend, is torn up while they replace the seawall. Gone are the buildings that lined the boardwalk. And gone is Paragon Park.

I spent two summers working in Paragon Park 50 years ago, making change for the Skeeball alleys and the Pokerino tables and calling Greyhound Races for Red Dennehy and Harold Feldman.

The games were owned in partnership by Larry Stone, who also owned Paragon Park, and Abe Feldman, also the proprietor of Funland outside the Park. Red managed for Larry; Harold for his brother, Abe.

So help me, I think I would have gone back for a third summer and a fourth and so on if there hadn't been a demand on the home front that I get what was called "a real job."

I spent two summers working in Paragon Park 50 years ago, making change for the Skeeball alleys and the Pokerino tables...

We worked hard at Paragon Park in those days, often from one in the afternoon to one in the morning with time out for a free meal of whatever wasn't selling particularly well at the Palm Garden Grille in the back of the park.

We had one day off a week and I spent mine tending bar for Johnny Infancino at the Gun Rock House. Johnny also ran the Flying Scooters next to the Skee Ball alleys. Even us college boys scrounged for whatever money we could get in the summer.

One week-long feature of Paragon Park was the "act," usually trapeze artists or sway pole performers with an occasional visit from Sol Solomon, who dove into a tub of water from a height of about 50 feet.

Whenever Sol came to the Park he would lead us park help up to the vacant third floor of the Palm Garden Grille and show us home movies of him diving into tubs all over the country. After a while, I'm sure at least one of us hoped he would miss.

The dominant ride at Paragon Park was the roller coaster. Each year, on the weekend the park opened, the park help was rounded up, put in the cars and sent over the track to test its safety. After one ride, park help tended to disappear. I know. I was one of them.

The fellow who took tickets for the roller coaster taught me a neat trick. When a guy took his girlfriend on a ride, she would go through the turnstile first. The ticket taker would stop the turnstile briefly so the guy would bump up against the girl. I don't know why, but many times he'd forget his change.

We had a trick ourselves on the Greyhound Race. The dogs were moved by bouncing a ball through a cup, tripping a switch. The length of the move was controlled by a rheostat. Whenever a "tip" or a "mark" got too good, at a signal from the mikeman, his assistant would duck in back and turn down the rheostat. If he complained, we'd shut down that particular dog and give him his dime back.

The time after the Park closed was recreation time for the park help. There was always Cohen's Diner, open all night, where you could get a shot of Seagram's 7 in a coffee mug from Old Man Cohen and sit and drink it until the sun came up.

I heard that some of the park help also kept an eye out for unattached females, who usually came in threes, throughout the evening. They tell me that the vacant third floor above the Palm Garden Grille was used for other entertainments besides Sol's movies.

Secretary of Environmental Affairs to review the MBTA's environmental impacts). I participated in each of these activities and experienced the T's tactics firsthand.

Section 106 is a unique mitigation process in which the MBTA does not make the mitigation decisions. Section 106 does not depend on the T's generosity (or lack thereof). Under Section 106, all mitigation decisions are made by the Massachusetts Historic Commission (MHC), acting with the help of the Army Corps of Engineers. The MBTA can only argue their position, as can each Town if it so chooses. But, MHC decides the mitigation. This is what makes Section 106 a much more level playing field for the towns.

Section 106 is a federal law designed to protect our historic resources. With so many historic resources in out town we are a prime candidate to take advantage of 106. In reality, 106 allows Cohasset to bring rail system design issues in any of the historic areas into the 106 mitigation process. This gives our town additional leverage in design issues (such as quad gates, berms, crossing designs, design impacts on neighborhoods, plantings, relocation of driveways, visual impacts, etc.) so we have a better chance to get what we want for our residents.

The Mitigation Committee, with Town support, hired a historical consultant to help identify Cohasset's historic buildings and areas during the Section 106 hearings. (In fact, we increased the areas protected by more than 200percent over what the MBTA originally offered.) Interestingly, when we were finished, all railroad crossings (except North Main Street) and many of our buildings are protected under Section 106. This positioned Cohasset well to take advantage of Section 106. The Town subsequently chose to blow off Section 106 as a mitigation tool to the point where the opportunity is mostly gone today.

During mitigation, we established liaisons with the Towns of Scituate and Hingham so that we could jointly work on issues of common interest to all towns. This was a very low key relationship of which most people were not aware. We found this to be a very effective tool. Today, this strategy has been ignored. For example, several weeks ago Hingham and Scituate were very unhappy with the design of the signaling at the railroad crossings. They requested and received a special meeting with the Department of Transporation in Boston to discuss this design. Cohasset was not involved at all because we do not routinely liaise with Scituate or Hingham. Could it have helped us get a better crossing design for Cohasset? You bet!

Today our policy is one of only direct interface with the MBTA on all issues. Although direct communication is an important part of the process, history has shown that it does not always produce the most favorable results, especially with the T. Alternate strategies and leverages, where available, will always serve to enhance our position. This is a fundamental tenet of any negotiation process. But, Cohasset no longer pursues multiple avenues.

The MBTA constantly feeds information through formal channels to all Greenbush towns for their review and comment. The time period in which each Town must respond is very short so as to not slow the project down. Since our Town Manager left, no one has been reviewing these materials and the Selectmen are just getting around to considering what to do about it. These reviews are crucial to protect us. How much of this information has passed the allowable time period for comment? You can be sure the MBTA will not hold up the project awaiting Cohasset's comments.

The Waterfield Group was selected by the previous Town Manager to fill the role of Ombudsman for Cohasset. According to the Waterfield President, their role was not defined to contain an strong advocacy role on behalf of residents. (What good is advocacy if it is not vigorous?). There have been meetings where residents were left "on their own" to present their position to the MBTA and others, even though the Ombudsman was present. It seems clear that the Ombudsman should know the issues that residents bring to his / her attention, but is not generally "wired" into the general issues and feelings of the people. How can they be working from the north shore?

At the request of the Town, we have paid Waterfield to develop and maintain an Ombudsman Web site. As of this date, several pages of this site are seriously out of date or lacking information. For example one page has an "out of the office" message dating back to March and a Project Status page says only "Contact the Ombudsman." These need to be made meaningful and current if anyone is serious about using the Web as an information tool. Further, I would strongly suggest that the Selectmen ask Waterfield to produce a monthly Web site "Hit Report." This report is routinely available for any Web site and shows how many times the site has been accessed and from where. The Selectmen may find that the Web site is not worth the expense. Who is really watching this?

Over the past several years I have had the opportunity to represent private business and neighborhood groups in their private negotiations with the MBTA. This has only reinforced my earlier comment that the MBTA is not a benevolent organization. You must work diligently and aggressively to protect yourself. Once construction starts in Cohasset, we will find out how the Selectmen really did to protect us. And, it will be too late.

Are we doing the best that can be done to protect Cohasset? I think not.

Revising the Town Manager Act

TO THE EDITOR:

In 1997 Cohasset revised its form of government from having a town administrator to having a town manager. The Town Manager Act of 1997 placed operational control of Cohasset under the town manager. The Act made the town manager the chief financial officer of the Town with responsibility for preparation and administration of the budget, approval of warrants for both payroll and accounts payable, and preparation and submission annually of a five-year capital improvement program. It also authorized the town manager to appoint all town employees except employees of the school department, supervise all town departments under the jurisdiction of the Selectmen, negotiate collective bargaining agreements and purchase for all Town functions.

The Act authorized the Selectmen to "exercise through the town manager general supervision over all matters affecting the interests or welfare of the town" with the principal mechanism being the issuance of policies and procedures. The prior role of the Advisory Committee to prepare and present the annual budget to Town Meeting was eliminated. The Act focused power in a single individual and diffused power that had traditionally vested in the elected Selectmen and the appointed Advisory Board. The passage of the Act was a reaction to the inefficiency of the democratic processes that people perceived as fostering debate but inhibiting action.

I believe that the Act now needs to be revised. In the seven years since its passage, we have gained efficiency but public debate and the perception of democratic control over events has suffered. Specifically, the Act failed to include any institutionalized checks and balances over the town manager. The Selectmen have "general supervision" over the town manager but no specific oversight responsibilities. I propose that the Town consider specific oversight in the following three areas: financial control, human resource management and contract administration.

Financial Control

Establish an audit committee of the Selectmen consisting of two Selectmen and three townspeople with relevant knowledge and experience.

Require the Selectmen to be responsible for the annual budget as prepared by the town manager and for the Selectmen to present it to Town Meeting

Establish a separate function of Chief Financial Officer and make it a direct report to the Selectmen

Human Resource Management

Establish a compensation/personnel committee of the Selectmen consisting of two Selectmen and three townspeople with relevant knowledge and experience.

Give responsibility and authority to the major town heads to hire, discipline and dismiss their direct reports with the approval of the next higher level of authority.

Require hiring and dismissal actions of the town manager subject to the approval of the Selectmen.

Contract Administration

Establish levels of signature authority with respect to the signing of warrants for both payroll and accounts payable.

Require review of all contracts by the Selectmen and/or Town Counsel with vendors that exceed established dollar thresholds.

Require language in all contracts that include among other provisions, performance criteria, audit language and cancellation clauses.

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Cohasset Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for more than 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on five roll calls and local senators' votes on four roll calls from the week of June 28-July 2.

FILLING U.S. SENATE VACANCY (S 2404)

House 122-30 and 116-34, Senate 31-7, approved and sent to Gov. Romney a bill that takes away the power of the governor to appoint a temporary replacement when a U.S. Senate seat becomes vacant in Massachusetts. The measure requires that a special election be held between 145 and 160 days after the incumbent senator files a letter of resignation, even if the actual resignation occurs at a later date. Current law gives the governor the authority to appoint a temporary replacement when the seat becomes vacant and provides that voters elect a senator at the next general state election or at the following general election if the vacancy occurs less than 70 days prior to the primary election. Supporters said the current system is archaic and takes power away from the voters by allowing a governor to make a political appointment that could last more than two years. They argued that the temporary appointee would have an unfair advantage as an "appointed incumbent." Opponents said the bill is sponsored by Democrats who fear Gov. Romney would have the opportunity to appoint a Republican to fill Sen. John Kerry's seat if he wins the November presidential election. They argued that holding a U.S. Senate election in a very short period of time would give an unfair advantage to incumbent Democratic congressman with huge war chests and make it difficult for lesser-known, underfunded citizens to mount an effective campaign. Some noted that Democratic legislators are being hypocritical because they have never proposed to change another current law that allows the Legislature to appoint a replacement when the offices of attorney general, secretary of state or auditor become vacant. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill. A "Nay" vote is against it).

TEMPORARY APPOINTMENT BY GOVERNOR (S 2404)

House 44-104, rejected an amendment to the bill requiring that a special election for U.S. Senate be held between 145 and 160 days after the incumbent senator files a letter of resignation. The amendment provides that the governor appoint a temporary replacement to serve until the new elected senator is sworn into office. Amendment supporters said that without the amendment, Massachusetts would have only one senator in the U.S. Senate for several months until a new senator is elected and sworn into office. They also noted that if a terrorist attack killed both Massachusetts senators, the state would be without any representation in the Senate for several months. Amendment opponents said the temporary appointee would have an unfair incumbent advantage over others seeking the office. They argued that the U.S. Congress is currently working on a constitutional amendment that would address the issue of how to fill U.S. House and Senate seats if more than 25 percent of federal legislators are killed in a terrorist attack. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment).

SAGAMORE ROTARY PROJECT (H 4866)

House 128-21, Senate 37-1, gave final approval to and sent to Gov. Romney a bill allowing the state to take 1.3 acres of open space land from the town of Bourne and in exchange give Bourne more than four acres of land, a new firehouse and a visitor's center. The measure also requires that the state complete all permitting necessary and take other specific actions for the extension of commuter rail services to New Bedford and Fall River. Supporters said this land-swap is necessary in order to begin construction on the $58 million so-called "flyover project" that would eliminate the existing Sagamore Rotary, replace it with a direct connection from Route 3 to the Sagamore Bridge and provide a new underpass for local traffic. They argued that the current rotary is an outdated and dangerous source of many accidents and often causes up to ten-mile traffic backups during the tourist season. Opponents said the bill unfairly puts these two projects ahead of other important construction projects across the state. Some argued that the Sagamore project is a costly and environmentally unfriendly one that is being pushed by the governor to benefit wealthy families with vacation homes on the Cape. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill. A "Nay" vote is against it).

POSTPONE ACTION ON SAGAMORE ROTARY PROJECT (H 4866)

Prior to giving final approval to the Bourne Land swap/Sagamore Rotary project bill supported by Gov. Romney, the House 121-31, had postponed action on it until July 30. Postponement supporters acknowledged that they favored postponement of the governor's pet Sagamore bill because Republicans were using parliamentary maneuvers to delay a separate bill that takes away Romney's power to appoint a temporary replacement when a U.S. Senate seat becomes vacant in Massachusetts. Postponement opponents said this is a vengeful power move that would delay the Sagamore project that is designed to help commuters and reduce motor vehicle accidents. Following approval of the Senate vacancy bill, the House reconsidered the postponement of the Sagamore Rotary bill and gave it final approval. (A "Yea" vote is for postponement. A "Nay" vote is against postponement).

ALLOW USE OF STUN GUNS (H 3400)

Senate 38-0, gave near final approval to a bill allowing police officers and special prison reactive teams, following proper training, to use stun guns also known as Tasers. Supporters said these guns would give officers an alternative to using lethal force and enable them to incapacitate suspects long enough to place them in handcuffs. They noted that Tasers are legal in most states and are an effective tool in law enforcement. The House has approved a different version of the bill and the Senate version now goes to the House for consideration. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).

PLACEMENT OF BABIES (H 4325)

Senate 38-0, gave near final approval to a bill allowing parents to leave their baby under the age of seven days at a police or fire station or hospital emergency room. The baby would then be placed into the state's foster care system. The measure requires the worker accepting the baby to make every effort to solicit identifying and background information from the parents. It also mandates that the state begin the process of terminating parental rights but stipulates that this voluntary abandonment does not constitute an automatic termination of these rights. Other provisions require the state to publicize the new law, teen pregnancy prevention programs and adoption information. The law would expire on June 30, 2008 unless renewed by the Legislature. Supporters said more than 40 other states have similar laws and argued that the measure would save lives and give young, scared mothers a choice. They argued that without this new law, unsafe abandonment or even the killing of babies would continue. The House has approved a different version of the bill and the Senate version now goes to the House for consideration. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).

HEALTH NOTES

A look beneath surface of Cohasset's local estuaries

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Straits Pond and the Weir River are undergoing substantial mitigation efforts, and perhaps the rate of degradation is being slowed.

A recent newspaper report indicated a ban on clamming was being lifted at Bassing Beach because a good supply of shellfish is now available. Similarly, local reports indicate that condition of eel grass and other plant life along Cohasset flats has improved. True, there are changes afoot along our waterfront, but it's necessary to look deeper than superficial anecdotal reports.

Thanks to some excellent experiments being carried out by the Massachusetts Office of Coastal Zone Management (CZM), and volunteers sponsored by the Board of Health, the Gulf Association, and scientific studies being done by the Center for Student Coastal Research (CSCR), as well as other groups such as the Weir River Watershed Association, the Straits Pond Association, and a new highly effective group from Hull: 'Sustainable South Shore', better assessment data is available about our various estuaries, and the news is at best, mixed.

True, the South Shore littoral is changing more rapidly than it has in years. Straits Pond and the Weir River are undergoing substantial mitigation efforts, and perhaps the rate of degradation is being slowed. Straits Pond has been in trouble for well over a hundred years, and great improvement there can only be expected with the introduction of substantial additional resources. On the other hand some good data is finally being collected about the pond's problems which, together with improved tidl gates at the outflow in North Cohasset, may improve the situation somewhat.

A far more complex problem exists in Little Harbor, Cohasset Cove and the Gulf. Since the baseline Natural Resource Inventory of the Gulf was completed in 2003, additional testing has been done on a systematic basis by the Army Corps of Engineers, and the CZM under the leadership of Jason Burtner, Scituate's CZM resident scientific advisor. Also, recently published results have indicated that Musquashicut Pond, a major tributary to the Gulf has been undergoing progressive degradation from poor tidal management. Hopefully improvement in tidal gate management can improve the situation in the Pond. Certainly, it would reduce or eliminate the midge infestation under which the residents suffer.

However, recent testing by the CSCR has indicated that high bacteria levels and low oxygen content are consistently a problem to Musquashicut. Such conditions are undoubtedly caused by septic systems, considerable bird life, and surface water runoff carrying nutrients from turf management practices around the pond. If I were asked what the future is for the Gulf, I would say that Musquashicut tidal gate management will increase the changes going on in the Gulf in the short term, but would eventually improve the situation, perhaps next year. There remains the problem of increased residential construction and its effect on storm-water runoff into the Gulf. The results of these changes may have the effect of continuing the periodic low oxygen levels from eutrophication (nutrients fostering plant growth) until Scituate and parts of Cohasset manage to better control waste-water and storm-water runoff to this estuary.

Little Harbor also seems to be undergoing slow improvement. There are still numerous high bacteria levels being found; seldom sufficient to prevent swimming, but certainly preventive of shellfish harvesting. Upper Little Harbor also seems to be undergoing a subtle change. The branch of the harbor above Cat Dam and east of James Island has been substantially free from algae for the entire month of June. This highly abnormal condition was initially noticed a year ago with an early cleanup of the 2003 crop of algae. On the other hand, algae build up in the northwest branch of upper Little Harbor has been unusually severe with several severe algae blooms, and considerable algae still exists well into July. Recent experience has never found algae this late in the estuary. In this case, the condition will likely get worse. One possible explanation is that the heavy mat of algae has decreased tidal flow in the north branch and increased tidal flow to the eastern branch. A probable cause for this difference in the two arms of the water above the dam could be increased amounts of storm water from expansion construction and runoff from lawn fertilizer around the northwestern part of this water body.

And so, we see nature responding to human activities. Looking dispassionately on the scene, it's possible to view the action and reaction as a waltz between reluctant partners each wishing to reach different parts of the dance floor.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health.

CHS laxmen determined to overcome heavy graduation losses in '05

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Before he starts talking about next season, Cohasset boys lacrosse coach Stu Curran wanted to make sure this season past received its proper dues.

"We had a great season as far as I'm concerned and it was a lot of fun," said Curran, a former college coach and longtime high school ref, who took over the CHS program this spring.

The Skippers suffered through early injuries to win eight of nine game before falling to Dover-Sherborn in the Div. 3 state semifinals, ending the season with a record of 11-8.

"I love way the kids picked it up at the end of the season," said Curran. "Senior (goalie) Nick Murphy was just tremendous down the stretch, as were lot of seniors. I'm sure they all wish we could have won a couple more games, but I think, in the end, they should feel good about the way they went out."

Indeed. This was thought to be a rebuilding year, with a new coach coming in and several key players from the '03 state semifinalist team (18-2) having been lost to the caps and gowns. However, the '04 edition wound up surprising by going just as far as their predecessors, and the new coach figured that was a testament, first and foremost, to the character and work ethic of his charges.

"If I'd have said going into this season to the parents and fans that we'd be back in the semifinals, they'd have said I was nuts," said Curran, "but we did it, and that's a credit to the hard work and character of these guys. Early in the season, injuries forced me to go with a lot of younger, untried player. But that gave them the battle testing they needed and it made us a stronger and deeper team at the end of the year.

"We're losing some very good players, but we've been

Evans-Sullivan tennis pairing a match made in heaven

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

Tennis seems like a pretty individualistic sport.

After all, it is a sport where a group of two or four athletes just hit a ball back and forth. There is no passing, no team defense, no group celebrations after a goal or a touchdown.

The atmosphere is a little different, however, when it comes to the Cohasset girls tennis team. The coaching staff constantly preaches the concept of team. The results can easily be seen during any match; it is rare to see more than a point or two go by without a teammate offering encouragement for someone playing their match.

Arguably, no two players embodied that team spirit better than Corey Evans and Emilie Sullivan. The recent graduates of CHS were a team throughout their high school career, and the last two years formed a reputation as a team who performed best when the pressure was on.

The teamwork and camaraderie between the duo served as a model for the entire team. The two say they are friends off the court as well as on, and Evans said it is that bond, as well as the different styles of play between her and Sullivan, that make them such an effective team.

"Emilie is the more aggressive player; I try to be more of a steady player at the net," Evans said. "We just get along, and we always have. We never have any issues."

Their effectiveness as a team and as senior leaders is a testament to the kind of people Evans and Sullivan are, says Cohasset head coach Gigi Meehan.

"Emilie and Corey are two of the nicest people you'd ever want to know," she said. "They had an easy partnership right from the get-go, and they com-

Cohasset's Anderson and Pinkus named among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Several of the young women you see listed below as "Honorable Mentions" received serious consideration for All-Scholastic acknowledgement.

In the end, however, we limited ourselves to a team of just 20 girls, and, after consulting with area coaches, we do feel secure that we chose the top softball players in Marinerland for this honor:

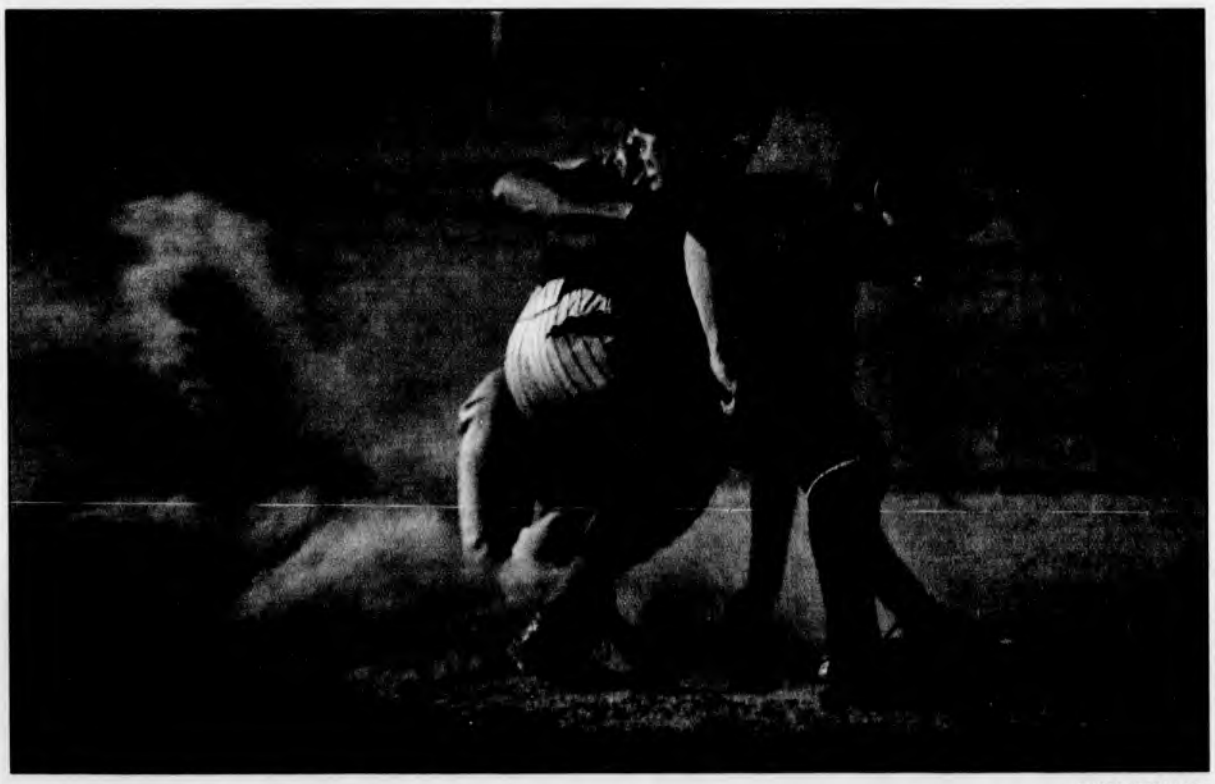
Catcher- Cohasset



Casey's work behind the plate was key this season in the development of the Skippers two freshman pitchers…improved tremendously in her ability to block pitches and prevent passed balls… received team's Defensive Player Award…South Shore League all-star…also a strong hitter, batting third and finishing among the team leaders with a .361 average…had two doubles, eight walks, 22 putouts and caught 77 third strikes…two year starter with second year varsity program…a natural athlete and a three sport standout at Cohasset High…

Hits to pitching staff catch up with Legion squad in a big way

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The pitching thin Post 118 Legion baseball team was looking downright anorexic after this week's action, and, unfortunately, the record followed suit.

The Cohasset team dropped four more decisions in action over the last week to fall to 1-11-1 on the season with just five games remaining, moving them into last placed in the Zone 6 standings. Needless to say, all hopes of a postseason berth are now gone, with only the top five of the league's 10 teams qualifying for extended play.

"Our pitching actually looked pretty solid to start the year, but it's been one thing after another with injuries and other things, and we really have no depth left," said coach Mike Duggan. "Having to play so many games is such a short period of time hasn't helped either."

Cohasset High senior-to-be Ted Straughn became the latest pitcher to be removed from the rotation, as he took off last Thursday with his AAU team for a two week college showcase down south, so he'll miss the rest of the season, as will fellow hurlers Greg Malley (broken wrist), Eric Dmohowski (shoulder) and originally projected staff ace Mark Rennie (torn ligament in pitching hand)—the latter two who've been unavailable since day one. What is more, team innings leader Joe Duggan has now been resigned to short relief work due to bouts with dead arm.

The team has also been hurt by the absences in a few of the games by starting catcher Terence O'Brien, starting third baseman Kevin Signorelli and recent offensive standout Tim Pilczak.

lege…sister of former CHS football, hockey and lacrosse all-star Tom Anderson, a 2003 graduate now playing college lacrosse…Cohasset coach Deb Bostwick: "Casey is a very smart girls and that helps her a lot behind the plate. She's very consistent and enthusiastic, and I can't say enough about the job she did working with three different pitchers this season."

Danielle Pinkus - Senior (Capt.)
Shortstop- Cohasset

Danielle Pinkus

Team MVP for much improved second year varsity program…a very strong defensive shortstop who was the clear leader on the field…also batted a very solid .351 out of the cleanup spot, with 11 doubles, 14 walks and a team best 53 putouts…South Shore League all-star… two year starter with second year varsity program…also a top basketball and field hockey player at Cohasset High, earning a Mariner All-Scholastic selection for the latter sport this past fall…was a captain of all three sports as a senior… Honor Roll student… member of Yearbook Staff… enjoys working with children, and has done a good deal of community service in that area…also interested in art…will attend UConn this fall and major in Liberal arts…leaning toward post graduation Pre-Med studies…will probably play intramural or club sports in college… Cohasset coach Deb Bostwick: "Danielle was our quarterback in the infield. She was the player who had the sense for where every ball should go before the play happened. She was our rock, as I found out the hard way in the one game she missed this season. She's an extremely intelligent player. She kept everyone on the team up and focussed."

AnnMarie Murphy - Junior
Pitcher - Abington

A two-year starter on the mound, Murphy has been the South Shore League's best hurler for the past two seasons…This year, the Abington ace went 12-2 on the season with nine shutouts…Her near untouchable ERA of 0.09, which placed her among the top five in Eastern Mass…Racked up 92 strikeouts in 96 innings pitched…Her performance helped lead the Green Wave to another unbeaten South Shore League title (12-0) and trip to their second-straight Div. 2 South Sectional semifinal…There, Murphy had hurled 20 2/3 scoreless innings before Coyle-Cassidy rallied in the seventh to steal the game…Played right field when not pitching…Also a cross country runner at AHS, Murphy will return to captain the team next season. Abington coach Steve Kingman: "

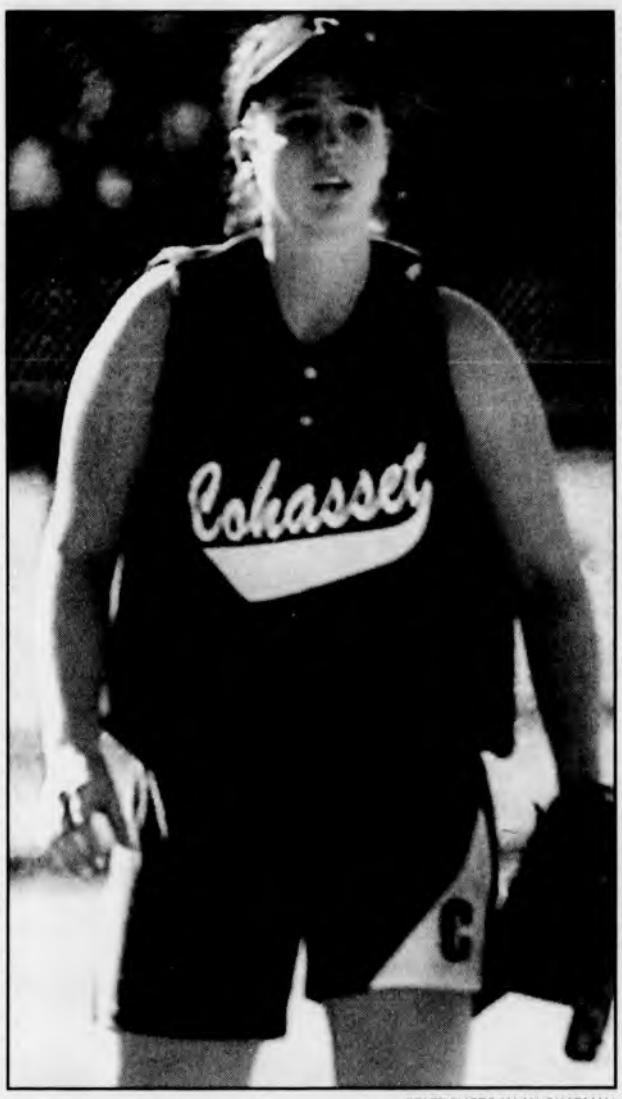
Michelle Leines - Senior (Capt.)
Pitcher - Abington

A four-year starter on the hill, Leines was again a force for the South Shore League champion Green Wave…The hard-throwing lefty went 6-1 on the season with a 1.47 ERA, pacing Abington to a 20-3 (12-0 SSL) season appearance in the semifinals of the Div. 2 South Sectional…The second leading hurler in the SSL behind only Murphy, Leines walked only 10 batters this season while striking out 54…Also had a big bat over her four-year career at AHS hitting .390 with 15 RBI and a homer from the No. 4 spot this season…When not pitching, Leines played a very solid right field…A four-year SSL All-star, Leines plans to attend Elms College in the fall.

Alex Hitchcock - Junior
Shortstop - Abington

This talented junior is making her second appearance on the All-Scholastic squad after another solid season at the highly active shortstop position…Her .475 batting average put her second on the Green Wave team and helped guide the squad to its third-straight unbeaten South Shore League title (12-0)…Tall and extremely athletic, Hitchcock is one of the South Shore's best shortstops, constantly displaying great range and a solid arm…She is a two-year starter at the position…Was one of the more productive hitters in the postseason, helping Abington (20-3) advance to its second-straight Div. 2 South Sectional semifinal…Just a junior, Hitchcock will return to her shortstop post next season.

Kim Lynch - Junior
First base - Abington



One of the more consistent hitters on the Green Wave team this season, Lynch led all players with a .529 average…Was also the team's leader in RBI, driving in 35 from the No. 5 spot in the order…This put her among the best in Eastern Mass…Plays an incredibly solid first base, often snaring hard-hit foul liners and scooping up difficult throws with ease…Her offense and defense helped Abington (20-3) win its third-straight unbeaten South Shore League title (12-0) and reach the semifinals of the Div. 2 South Sectional tourney…Just a junior, Lynch is already a two-time SSL All-star and will return to her first base post next spring.

Lindsey Arria - Junior
Shortstop - Hanover

Despite sustaining a heartbreaking knee injury down the stretch, Arria was one of the best players in the Patriot League…A three-year starter and three-time All-Scholastic at shortstop, the junior led all batters in the PL with a .500 average prior to the injury, helping the Lady Indians snag their second-straight PL title (11-1)…Returned for the postseason tournament and finished the year with a .481 average…Went 25-for-52 at the plate with 19 runs scored and 15 stolen bases from the No. 2 spot in the order…Led the team in triples and was second in doubles with nine…Only struck out once during the regular season and committed only one error from the active shortstop position…Also a talented soccer and basketball player at HHS, Arria will captain all three teams next year. Hanover coach Matt Plummer: "Lindsey is just an incredible athlete. She makes outs that you just don't see other players make. She makes catches you don't see anyone else make. She's amazing."

Taryn Sullivan - Senior (Capt.)
Second base - Hanover

This three-year Patriot League All-star is making her third appearance on the All-Scholastic team…Was tied with teammate Lisa Gilchrist as the leading hitter on the Hanover squad at .490…She has been among the top hitters on the team throughout her four-year varsity career…Racked up 19 RBI and scored 20 runs from the No. 3 spot in the order…Got on base many times via her hard-hit infield singles, but it was her 10 team-leading doubles that made her one of the most dangerous hitters in the league…Defensively at second base, Sullivan committed only a trio of errors and had to increase her range when first baseman Penny King's mobility was limited by injury…Also a talented soccer player at HHS, Sullivan plans to continue her athletic career at Bridgewater State College next fall. Hanover coach Matt Plummer: "Taryn was one of the most feared players in the league because she just hits the ball so hard. She always came up with a base hit when we needed it and definitely improved defensively."

Danielle Pinkus was voted team MVP for Cohasset High's much improved second year varsity program in recognition of her strong hitting and play at shortstop, as well as her leadership.

Lisa Gilchrist - Senior (Capt.)
Right field - Hanover

It was a breakout season for this hard-hitting senior captain…Tied for the team lead in hitting with Taryn Sullivan with a .490 average…Was the Patriot League champions' leader in homeruns with four while also racking up 16 RBI and 20 runs scored…Walked seven times and stole five bases, while striking out only once all season…All this from the No. 9 spot in the order…A big part of the Lady Indians' defensively sound outfield, Gilchrist's arm was wisely rarely tested…Also a at HHS, Gilchrist plans to attend Messiah College in the fall. Hanover coach Matt Plummer: "We had such an advantage with her in the 9-spot. She was always getting on base for the top of the order and just proved that there was no break in our lineup. She had a lot of power too. I saw her hit a ball that rolled all the way to the football stands 360 feet away from home plate. Unbelievable."

Keri Gerrish - Senior (Capt.)
Pitcher - Hanover

Hurling behind multiple All-Scholastic honoree Nikki Messina last season, this year was Gerrish's time to shine…Splitting time with Nikki's younger sister Ashley, Gerrish won six games this season, including a 5-3 victory over Abington, a Div. 2 South semifinalist…Was on the hill for a tough 1-0 loss to Duxbury in which she only gave up four hits, but still helped guide the Lady Indians to their second-straight Patriot League title (11-1)…Had more strikeouts than innings pitched with 63 K's in 58 innings for a very respectable 0.85 ERA…Played third base when not pitching…Also a field hockey and gymnast at HHS, Gerrish plans to attend college in the fall. Hanover coach Matt Plummer: "Keri is a competitor and that showed as the season went on. Because of her infield experience she was great on bunts. She could sneak the ball by anyone."

Rosie Snow - Senior (Capt.)
Pitcher - Marshfield

As the ace of the very young Lady Rams squad, Snow was a leader both as a captain and on the mound…A starter since her freshman season, Snow is a three-time Old Colony League All-star and started all 21 games this season…Struck out 114 batters in 147 innings pitched for a 1.33 ERA…Allowed just five hits while striking out eight in Marshfield's (10-10) tourney-qualifying 21-3 victory over Falmouth…Also ran indoor track at MHS…Snow plans to attend the University of Delaware in the fall to major in Visual Communications…She plans to tryout for the softball team. Marshfield coach Mike Barrett: "Rosie never really got the chance to shine because we never really had the defense to back her up. She was always very consistent and did her job. She deserved to win more games."

Jean McIntyre - Sophomore
Catcher - Marshfield

Robbed of an All-star nod in the talent-filled Old Colony League, we just couldn't pass up McIntryre…Just a sophomore, she was the leading hitter on the Marshfield (10-10) squad with a .420 average…Hitting from both the No. 1 and No. 2 spots, McIntyre drove in 20 runs…Always on base, the speedy sophomore also stole 51 bags this season…Often ran out bunts for singles and drove in 11 on sacrifice flies…All this in her first varsity season with the Lady Rams…Her offense and defense kept Marshfield in many games, as she averaged only two passed balls per contest…McIntyre and twin sister Nicole, who broke her collarbone three games into the season, will both be back to lead the offense next spring. Marshfield coach Mike Barrett: "Jean is the reason why we were in so many games this season. People didn't try to steal against her because she blocked everything. She really carried us and did an outstanding job."

Amy Breen- Senior
Pitcher- Holbrook

Outstanding pitcher who led Bulldogs to a 19-1 regular season, Mayflower League championship and the semifinals of the Div. 3 South Sectionals, the furthest advancement ever for an HHS team…control was hallmark of this hurler, as witnessed by a sensational strikeouts to walk ratio…posted an ERA just a shade over 2.0…also a force on offense, as she hit a solid .350 and finished second on the team in stolen bases…a five year varsity performer…team's number one pitcher for three years… an accomplished bunter who laid down several for base hits and sacrifices this season… two-time Mayflower League all-star…was a four year member of the varsity soccer team and also played basketball at HHS through her junior year… Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic Honorable Mention…one-time Mayflower League all-star in soccer…National Honors Society member and Honor Roll student…President of her graduating class…will attend Leslie College, where she has been recruited to play softball…plans to major in Special Education…Holbrook co-head coach Sue Fontecchio: "Amy was far and away the best pitcher in the Mayflower League. There were times she carried us. She really stepped it up this season."

Jessica MacNeil - Senior (Capt.)
Shortstop - Holbrook

This is Jessy's sixth selection as a Mariner All-Scholastic, and second in a row for softball…batted .430 this year out of the third spot in the batting order, keying the Bulldogs (19-1) to a Mayflower League championship and the semifinals of the Div. 3 South Sectionals, the furthest advancement ever for an HHS team, and led the team in stolen bases …defense, though, was her number one offering to the team… made only one error in the regular season playing the busiest position on the diamond…sensational speed and athleticism allowed her to get to many balls that appeared labeled for base hits…the Bulldogs starter at shortstop since the seventh grade… had only hit against Katie Brides in semifinals loss to two-time Div. 3 state champion West Bridgewater… led team in stolen bases as well…hit team best .518 as a junior…now a four time Mayflower League all-star in both basketball and soccer, as well as a three-timer for softball… a six time Mariner All-Scholastic, making our teams for all six seasons since Holbrook High was added to our mix… was voted Best Female Athlete in graduating class…National Honors Society member…Class Treasurer…a varsity starter in both soccer and basketball since the eighth grade…serve as a captain for all three teams this school year… serves as an instructor at youth soccer camps in the summer…hopes to play soccer at Northeastern University…plans to major in Journalism…Holbrook co head coach Sharon Farrell: ""Jessy Mac is a defensive power house. Nothing gets by her…Jessy is a talented athlete, obviously, but she's also very committed to whatever sport she's doing and she's a leader on three different teams."…Holbrook co-head coach Susan Fontecchio: "Jessy is one of those silent leaders who led by led by hard work and commitment. Her defense was just amazing, the difference between winning and losign for us in so many games."

Emily Bularzik - Junior
Pitcher - Braintree

Emily earns her second straight Mariner All-Scholastic selection with a sensational junior campaign on the mound for the Lady Wamps…posted a 14-4 record to help key Braintree to a Bay State Conference-Carey Division championship…was named a first team BSC all-star for the second year in a row and was voted co-MVP of Carey division… the 5-foot-2 righty utilized pinpoint control to strike out 105 batters in 123 innings of work, while walking just three… finished the season with an ERA of 0.97…also an outstanding defensive player from the mound…plays her position defensively as well as any pitcher…a .377 hitter…Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic…number one academically in the junior class of approximately 350… plays AAU softball for the Bay State Strikers…co-captain of the BHS debate team…member of the math team…French National Honor Society member… a serious violin player…Braintree coach Mike Goldman: "Control was Emily's thing on the mound. It was really remarkable for someone so young. She also has an outstanding attitude for softball and a great kid…she also defended her position as well as any pitcher in our league."

Merry MacDonald - Sophomore

Merry earns the second All-Scholastic acknowledgement of her sophomore year, having made out volleyball team this past fall…was the spark plug for the BSC-Carey division champion Wamps, batting a team best .389 out of the leadoff spot…also led the Wamps in runs, hits, rbi (30), steals (30) and home runs (four), including two grand slams….fastest runner on the team…was a perfect 15-for-15 on steals of second base…a very good bunter… a very good defensive third baseman with a powerful arm…voted first team Bay State League all star for second year in a row… Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic…also a standout with varsity basketball team…plays AAU basketball for the five time defending state champion Bay State Magic team…plays AAU softball in the off season with the South Shore Drifters…Honor Roll Student who ranks 24th in her class of 384…hopes to play college basketball…Braintree coach Mike Goldman: "Merry was out most dangerous all-around offensive player. The Cohasset Minor League Angels won the regular season and championship with a remarkable 15 - 0 record. A wonderful group of kids and parents, this marks the first undefeated season most "old timers" could recall in the league. This wonderful group of kids were Danny Aherne, John Currier, Billy Curry, Anderson Darrell, Ryan Davis, Anders Goetz, Connor Goetz, Nate Morse, Drew Nahill, Anthony Nahill, Matthew Swanborg, Nicky Tangherlini, Jaime Timothy and Evan Yeager. Head Coach Bob Tangherlini had an impressive "first season" as head coach. Congratulations to Bob, his boys, and all of the minor league's players, coaches, and parents for a terrific year!!

Canton 8, Cohasset 3

The Post 118ers got an excellent start out of Thayer High junior Shane Caffrey last Tuesday in Canton, as he held the hosts to just one run through four innings, keying his team to a 3-1 lead.

After Terence O'Brien walked and Jeff Ciulla singled to open the third, Jack O'Leary brought them both around to score with a sharp single. Joe Duggan scored what would turn out to be Cohasset's final run in the top of the fifth when he doubled and then came home on a Straughn single, giving the visitors a 3-1 lead.

It would be shortlived.

Caffrey tired in the fifth, and the total dearth of available arms behind him forced Coach Duggan to stick with him. The end result was four Canton runs in that frame and another three in the sixth. Ball game.

"Shane pitched a whale of a game for four innings, but asking him to go beyond that was a lot," said Duggan. "He battled, though, and I give him full credit for that."

Stoughton 16, Cohasset 9

If not for a few strong offensive performances, this one might have qualified for one of the season's worst for the Post 118 squad, according to Coach Duggan.

Ciulla continued his hot hitting, going 3-for-4, in this loss at Scituate High Wednesday. Joe Duggan went 2-for-3 and Nick Infusino had two hits as well and a few rbi.

Canton 12, Cohasset 7

The host 118ers took advantage of a wind blowing out of Scituate High, last Thursday, as they powered up for three home runs.

Unfortunately, control problems for the starter on the mound allowed the visitors to maintain a lead throughout, with six walks through three innings contributing to nine earned runs. Infusino, a lefty who'll be a junior at Scituate High this fall, showed encouraging signs, working three solid innings of relief, including striking out the side in the fourth. However, Canton caught up to him for a pair in the sixth.

Ciulla got the hosts off on the right foot, as he lined the first pitch in the bottom of the first inning, a waist high fastball on the outer half of the plate, over the fence in right center for the first out-of-the-park dinger of his formal baseball career.

Jeff Radding and Scott Carroll (2-for-4) each had two run shots during a six run second inning. Jack O'Leary also had a big day at the plate, going 3-for-4.

Braintree 15, Cohasset 2

The Post 118 was simply no match for the Zone 6 leading Braintree squad (16-3) and staff ace Brendan Daly (four hits and three walks through six innings), in their sixth game in as many nights, Friday under the lights at Braintree High.

Jack Oleary started well on the mound for the visitors, surrendering one run through the first two innings with some shoddy defense lending a hand.

However, the explosive host 86ers batted around in the third, with six of the first seven batters reaching by hit. The end result was five runs and a lead Cohasset would never challenge.

Duggan got the visitors on the board in the top of the fourth when he walked, moved to second on a Kevin Signorelli singles and then scored on a throwing error.

Duggan plated O'Leary, who'd reached on a two out walk, in the sixth with a double over the centerfielder's head.

However, this came after the host's had exploded for four more runs in the bottom of th efifth to put the game completely out of reach. The league leaders then piled on with five more runs in their final at bat.

Next up

Monday's scheduled game at Dorchester was postponed due to rain. No makeup date has yet to be set.

Cohasset was slated to play at Milton yesterday with Caffrey as the starter.

The post 118ers will be at Weymouth tomorrow (Legion Field, 5:45 p.m. start) and then play their final home game of the season on Sunday, as Morrisette comes to town (5:45 p.m. start, Scituate High).

They'll be at Milton Academy Monday to take on Milton (5:45 p.m.) again and then West Roxbury Tuesday to close out the season (5:45 p.m., Billings Field).

"Hopefully, we can go out strong," said Duggan. "I give the kids credit. Their coming out and workig nhard. It's still baseball and it's still fun."

pliment each other so well. They are just nice all-around people."

Proof of that positive attitude was evident during many of the team's practices. Tales abound of upperclassmen being rude to, or just plain ignoring, freshmen and sophomores on a varsity team.

Again, in Cohasset, that is not the case. The team's regular starting lineup was mostly a veteran one, with four seniors, two juniors and one sophomore. During practice, Evans and Sullivan would frequently hit with the younger girls who did not play nearly as much.

The benefits from that kind of leadership and involvement will no doubt become evident in the near future.

"Some of those younger girls are really good," Sullivan said. "I think it was good for them. You could really see their potential."

Some of the girls who Sullivan and Evans mentioned included Katie Bolger, Emilie Shea, Emma Grinnell, Casey Cannavaro, Katherine Whoriskey, and two sets of the twins: the Landons (Charlotte and Liz) and the Muirs (Carrie and Christine).

"I definitely think that a lot of them will play next year," Evans said.

Meehan described all four of her seniors-- Evans, Sullivan, Holly Graham and Courtney Caron-- as quiet people who lead by example. The example set by Evans and Sullivan rubbed off on more than their own team.

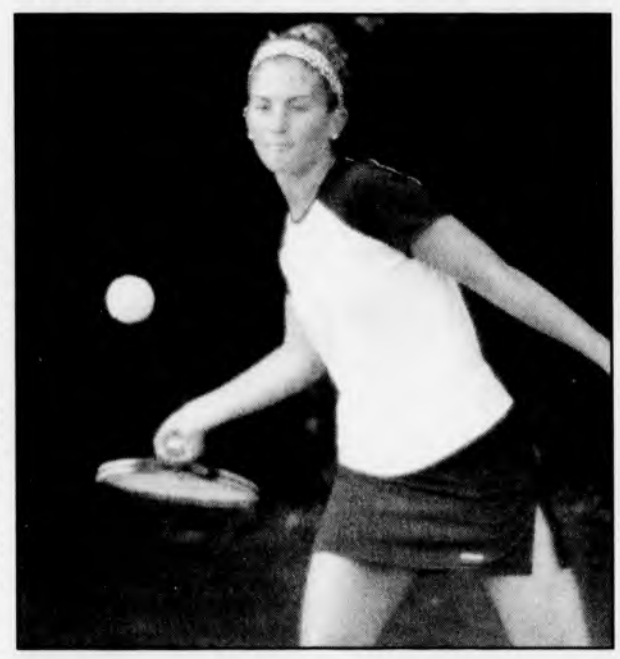
Meehan said there were a number of times where opposing coaches, after a match that the Cohasset duo won easily, praised the team for the grace and humility that they had shown.

"We took a lot of pride as a team in sportsmanship," Meehan said. "Both of those girls made it really easy for me to give that speech."

Now that high school is over, Evans will be attending Loyola University in Maryland, where she says she is thinking about majoring in marketing. Sullivan will head to Pennsylvania to attend Lafayette College. She says she is considering a career in graphic designing.

Whatever happens in college, the girls' memories at Cohasset High School will not be easily forgotten. They said they would especially look back fondly at their prom, and their senior year as a whole.

"Our grade really came together this year," Sullivan said of the 86 members of the Class of 2004. "This was my favorite year."



Meehan says she is more than confident that Evans and Sullivan will succeed at the next stage of their lives, and that their attitude will me missed next year.

"Either one of those girls would do anything for you," Meehan said. "They always have so much positive energy. I'm going to miss them a lot."

developing guys who will hopefully step right in next year."

The Skippers will lose nine players in all to graduation, chief among them Pilgrim Conference second team all-scholastics Conor Buick and Mike Devine, both captains and defensive stalwarts. P.C. Honorable Mentions Nick Murphy, the team's goalie, and Mark Davis also go the way of the caps and gowns, as do Morris, Steven Davis, Tufts, Rob Carpenter and Mike Rasmussen, the team's second leading scorer (40 points) despite missing the first six games with a broken wrist.

Despite these losses, coach Curran sounds confident his team will be right back in the postseason next spring.

"Our guys have to have the attitude that they expect to get to state championship," said Curran. "We're in a very competitive league, and we might not have as much depth as a lot of the other teams, given what a small school this is, but I like the odds of stacking up my best 10 players against just about anyone else's top 10."

The play of junior-to-be Aidan Buick (#15) down the stretch has Coach Curran feeling good about the prospects for his attack next spring.

Team leading scorer Jake Previte (44 goals, 43 assists), another second team Pilgrim Conference selection, will be back for his senior year and Aidan Buick for his junior campaign, so the offense should be in good hands.

"Jake is probably one of the most skilled offensive players on the South Shore," said Curran. "He really stepped it up down the stretch and teamed very well with (Rasmussen) and Aidan. It won't be easy to replace a lot of the things Rassy gave us, but Aidan finished real strong. If he can pick up where he left off to start next year, I think we'll be just fine on offense."

Competing for the third starting spot on the attack will likely be junior John Grimm and sophomores Mike Bunstein, Dan Trendowicz and Chris Davis (Mark's brother). Grimm is an undeniable offensive talent, but he was slowed for much of the season by the aftereffects of a broken leg.

Athleticism and strong stick skills may make Bunstein and Trendowicz candidates for play in the midfield as well, an area that was hit particularly hard by graduation—with Morris, Tufts, Mark Davis and Carpenter all having been stalwarts there.

"There's no doubt about it," said Curran. "We'll miss all four of those guys: Morris for his speed, Davis for his grittiness, Tufts for his savvy and Carpenter for his athleticism. Really, they were all good lacrosse players."

Seniors to be Sam Steele and Joe Durkin, who missed the latter half of the season to injury, and junior to be Trevor Brady are three of the players who will no doubt be looked upon to step it up even bigger next spring.

"Sam just got better and better as the year went along," said Curran. "He's probably our most polished returning midfielder. He'll be counted on a lot in our transition game."

Fortunately, middie depth was an area of strength in this season's JV and underclass ranks.

Defensively, there's no doubt the loss of Murphy in net and two of the four starting longsticks, Devine and Conor Buick, will be missed.

Expected to anchor the defense next year is sophomore to be Jeff Brown. All he did in his freshman year was earn a Pilgrim Conference Honorable Mention nod. The return of a healthy Casey Coleman, who missed the last few regular season games and all of the playoffs after coming down with mononucleosis, will also help. In Coleman's absence, junior Kevin Dinsmore stepped into his starting role and acquitted himself quite well, according to the coach, so he'd certainly appear to have a leg up in the competition for one longstick spot.

The competition to replace Murphy, a two year starter in net, could be a good one between steady junior Chris Simms and diminutive but slick and athletic Ben Libby.

Cohasset Swim team off to thunderous start

The Cohasset Swim Team's 2004 season got off to a truly thunderous start as it hosted the first swim meet of the summer against the Duxbury Yacht Club. While looming clouds threatened to end the swim meet, 38 of the 64 races were completed before the announcement to "get out of the water" was heard amidst the early claps of thunder. Ted Hughes, now in his second season as head coach for the Cohasset team, with the help of numerous parents, managed to stay focused, as an excited crowd of swimmers and spectators watched from the sidelines. The results were:

Hockey fans lineup for look at Stanley Cup

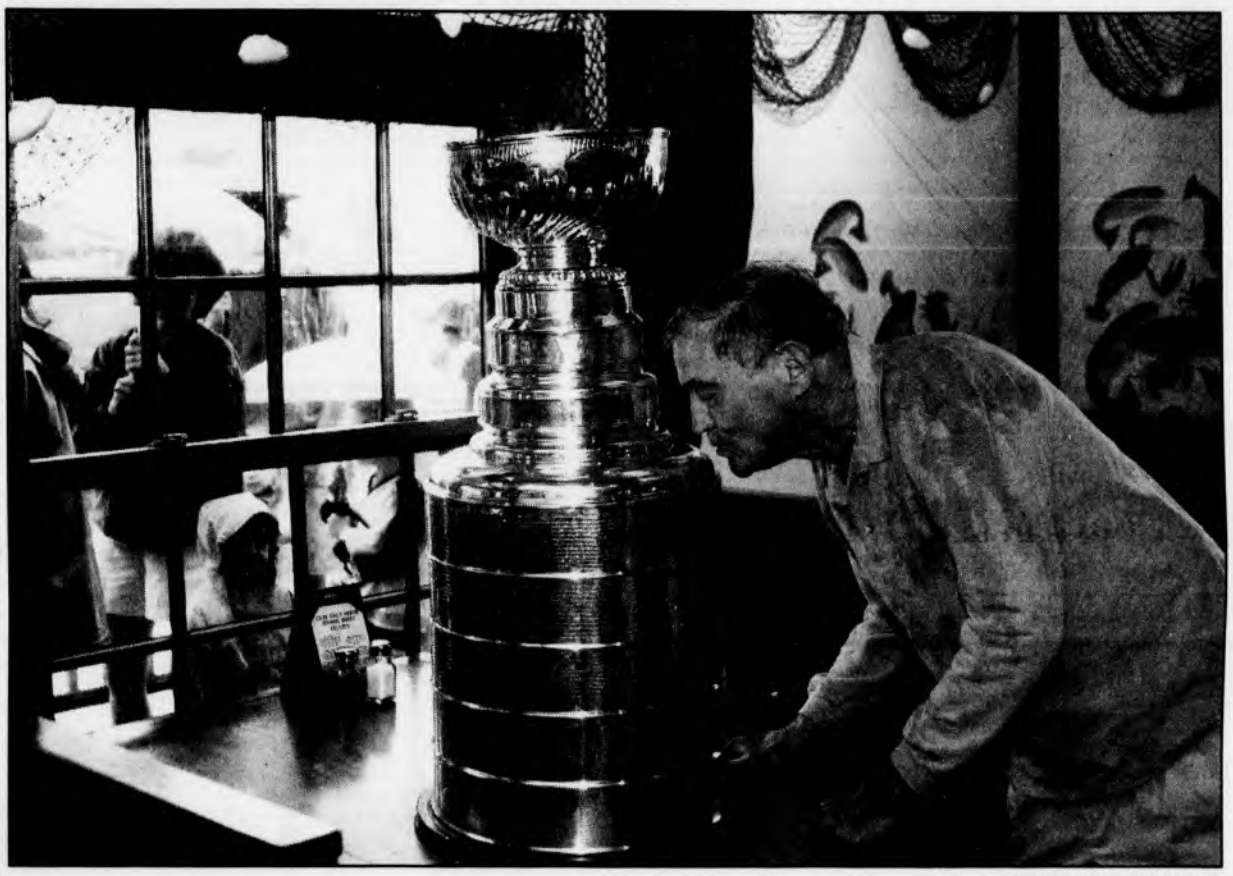
Tampa Bay Lightning's Brad Richards – the Conn Smythe Trophy winner for most valuable player – hails from Prince Edward Island. He sipped Lobster bisque from the Stanley Cup on its recent trip to Tampa. From there the cup went to the MacDill Air Force Base in Florida where it was cheered by military personnel.

The line in Cohasset Monday that snaked around the building and across the Atlantica parking lot consisted of an enthusiastic cross-section of people, who all shared a love of hockey. All ages with umbrellas in hand queued up for a chance to spend about half a minute with the historic Stanley Cup and snap a couple of photographs.

The youngest fan in line was undoubtedly, Nicholas Michael Blasi of Quincy, who, at just one week old, was clad from head to toe in a Boston Bruins baby outfit.

"He's the newest member of Bruins nation," said his proud dad, William, who said Nicholas arrived June 29 weighing in at 6 lbs. 11 oz. and measuring 19-3/4 ins. in height – a far cry from the six-foot plus and upwards of 200-lb. average height and weight for today's NHL hockey players. "I'm getting him some hockey sticks next," Mr. Blasi said with a smile.

Cohasset dad, Kevin Ulmer, stood in line alone unaccompanied by any young fans.



"My son would die for this," Ulmer said as he grinned for the camera next to the Stanley Cup, explaining his 14-year-old son, Wesley, was away at camp in New Hampshire.

Charlie and Jack Coffman, 11 and six respectively, of Cohasset brought along their cousin Joe Sweeney, 11, of Pennsylvania.

Both youth hockey players, Charlie said it was "awesome" to see the cup and Jack said it was almost as tall as he was. Joe said he doesn't play but enjoys being a fan of the game.

Matt McCormick, 14, of Braintree, waited patiently with is younger brother, Jimmy, and dad, Paul. Matt, who plays at the Bantam level, described the experience of seeing the sterling silver Stanley Cup as a true hockey player would – one used to hanging out in chilly ice rinks.

"It was really cool," Matt said.

STAFF PHOTOS/SUSAN HANEY

After waiting for more than an hour in the rain to see it, Ed Rapoport of Scituate leans to kiss the holy grail of hockey, the Stanley Cup, at the Olde Salt House on Monday.

One-week-old Nicholas Michael Blasi – the newest member of Bruins Nation, according to his father, William, gets a photo op with the Stanley Cup.

Growing annual flowers for color all summer long

GREEN THUMBS UP

SUZANNE MAHLER

With the passing of the July 4th holiday weekend, summertime activities shift into high gear. For many New Englanders, the months of July and August are a time for beaches, boating, golf, and vacations. For passionate gardeners, however, these months are a time to weed, water, and deadhead, but time also to stroll through the gardens, enjoy butterflies and hummingbirds hovering among beautiful flowers, and reap the rewards of a bounty of fresh homegrown veggies.

Despite my best intentions each growing season to plant my vegetables and tender annual seedlings around Memorial Day, I usually find myself too busy with lawn care, pruning trees and shrubs, and renovating perennial borders early in the season. It is often the 4th of July or even later that the annual and vegetable transplants find their way into the soil or decorative containers, but warmth, fertilizer and consistent moisture often make up for lost time. We still manage to harvest vegetables later in the season and the annuals put on a great show in the late summer and early fall when many of the perennial blooms have faded.

Plants grown as annuals offer a wonderful profusion of colorful flowers and foliages. In addition to traditional bedding plants that are generally sold in 6-packs, tender tropicals, herbs, biennials and summer bulbs are often included in this category of non-winter hardy plant material. With so many plants from which to choose, making selections is often overwhelming.

Several hours of sunlight are essential for the majority of flowering annuals to prosper and produce abundant blooms. For sunny locales, traditional favorites include geraniums, marigolds, petunias, and salvias. Bedding dahlias, snapdragons, verbena, flowering tobacco (Nicotiana), zinnias and ageratum favor similar conditions including well-drained, moisture-retentive soils. For average to dry soils, consider growing spider plant (Cleome), dusty miller, globe amaranth, cosmos, portulaca, sweet alyssum, calendulas, nasturtiums and periwinkle (Vinca rosea).

Shady sites pose a greater challenge for growing nearly all flowering plants, especially where the roots of woody plants make digging a hole a formidable task. Annual transplants are often an ideal solution for bringing a touch of summertime color to these areas of dappled shade. Their compact root systems enable gardeners to tuck them here and there among trees and shrubs and given a few hours of filtered sunlight, many will survive and thrive throughout the summer months. Impatiens are by far the most popular plants for this purpose due to their prolific flowering, vibrant colors and perhaps their most endearing quality, the fact that they do not require the removal of spent flowers. In addition to the familiar single-flowering varieties, double-flowering cultivars resembling tiny roses are available. Their cousins, the New Guinea impatiens, offer larger blossoms and often demonstrate tinted or variegated foliage. While touted as being sun-tolerant, I find the flowers often fade in afternoon sun and plants may quickly succumb if not provided with adequate moisture. All members of this family require moisture-retentive soils and should be monitored for dryness during periods of drought.

While impatiens steal the show in partial shade, a number of other annual plants can be grown in lower light conditions. Wax begonias offer compact, fleshy plants smothered in pink, white, or red flowers. They are ideal plants to use for edging shady borders and will tolerate sun in moisture-retentive soils. Other members of the begonia family are equally valuable additions to the shady garden including the showy tuberous begonias and a wide range of flowering varieties with elegant leaves that can be dug or cuttings taken and grown as houseplants during the colder months.

The family of fuchsias is a personal favorite for lightly shaded spaces. Both cascading and upright varieties are available in the trade with darling upright miniatures for bedding or containers and showy, voluptuous blooms on pendulous types that make them excellent candidates for hanging baskets. I suppose my attraction to these plants is in part due to their ability to lure hummingbirds. Wishbone flowers (Torenia) with unique tubular blossoms in shades of blue, purple and pink prefer filtered light, as well. Trailing varieties are ideal for containers and upright transplants are used for edging my shady borders.

Perhaps my greatest addiction to annuals in recent years comes in the form of coleus. These stunning foliage plants are easily grown in partial shade to full sun, as bedding plants or in containers. Exotic leaves in shades of purple, red, pink, salmon, gold, bronze, rust, chartreuse, ad infinitum, are available although I must often travel from nursery to nursery to find a broad selection of these versatile plants. Many require direct sun for at least part of the day and a certain degree of maturity to demonstrate their brilliant multicolored tints.

Several other foliage plants provide colorful additions to beds, borders and containers in my gardens. Persian shield (Strobilanthes) offers exciting purple and silver streaked leaves on a bushy upright plant that makes a stunning focal point for the garden or a large container. Attractive companions to these purple leafed plants are the sun-scape daisies (Osteospermum) that feature cream, white, yellow, or orange flowers with purple rings around the central disk. The elegant purple fountain grass (Pennisetum setaceum), Red Shield Hibiscus, perilla, and Alternanthera contribute reddish purple leaves.

While it is hard to deny the splendor of familiar, traditional bedding plants, try something new this season to add a colorful accent that will be enjoyed throughout the summer months.

Dress up Asian summer noodles

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

We have all heard of cold sesame noodles, but few of us have had Asian noodles dressed with a soy sauce/rice vinegar mixture and then topped with shredded/sliced vegetables. This cold noodle salad is standard fare during hot weather since it is light, refreshing, and packs a lot of flavor.

The standard noodles for this dish are somen noodles, which are thin, fragile, white noodles, made from wheat flour. (Inside the cellophane package they are often tied up in neat bundles.) They appear both fragile and elegant. We were able to find them at Whole Foods as well as Asian markets, but in a pinch you can use angel hair pasta. Unlike Italian pasta, these noodles are salted so the cooking water needn't be. We used eight ounces of noodles that swell up into a plentiful amount once cooked. The noodles boil for just three minutes, are drained, and then rinsed in cold water until they are chilled and all of the starch is removed. Once chilled, they should be arranged in an even layer on a serving platter.

The dressing recipes we researched all consisted of soy, rice vinegar, sugar. Some also included garlic and ginger while others used vegetable oil, peanut oil or sesame oil. We tried using lite or low sodium soy but we preferred regular soy sauce. (A good quality brand of soy sauce is a must and we recommend San-J or Kikkoman.) A quarter cup of rice vinegar helped brighten the dressing and then, much to our surprise, a large amount of sugar worked well. (These highly seasoned noodles will be served with plain raw greens and vegetables, so big flavor is called for here.) We tested and discarded both garlic and ginger (too overpowering) but did like a combination of sesame and vegetable oil.

As for the vegetables, we really liked crunchy shredded lettuce such as romaine or iceberg. A cup of peeled, thinly sliced cucumber, a half-cup of scallions, and optional carrots and bean sprouts also added flavor and balance. Many of these recipes also included a thinly sliced omelet made with two eggs. We liked this unusual addition as well.

The dish can be assembled several hours ahead of time but shouldn't be dressed until served. The noodles are spread in an even layer on a platter. They are topped with a layer of lettuce. The remaining garnishes are layered over the noodles. The dressing can simply be passed around the table. This is a cool, fresh, light dish that is a refreshing change from cole slaw or potato salad.

ASIAN SUMMER NOODLE SALAD

The recipe calls for somen noodles, which are a very thin, white Japanese noodle that is traditionally served cold. They are available at Asian markets as well as Whole Foods. You can use angel hair pasta as a substitute.

For the dressing:
1/4 cup soy sauce
1/4 cup rice vinegar
1/4 cup granulated sugar
1 1/2 teaspoons sesame oil
1 tablespoon vegetable or peanut oil

For the noodles:
8 ounces somen noodles or other white, very thin noodles made from wheat flour
1 1/2 teaspoons vegetable or peanut oil
2 large eggs, beaten lightly
3 cups crunchy lettuce such as iceberg or romaine, very thinly sliced
1 cup peeled cucumber, quartered and thinly sliced
1/2 cup thinly sliced scallions
1/2 cup carrots cut into matchsticks or 1/3 cup carrots grated on the large holes of a box grater (optional)
1/2 cup bean sprouts (optional)

1. For the dressing, combine all ingredients in a small bowl and whisk together until homogenous and thickened slightly. Set aside or refrigerate for up to a week. Whisk briefly immediately before serving.

2. For the noodles, set a large pot of water to boil over high heat. When boiling, add the noodles and cook until just tender, about three minutes. (Adjust time for angel hair if using that.) Drain the noodles and rinse under cold water until the noodles are well chilled. Arrange the noodles in an even layer on a serving platter or rectangular baking dish and set aside.

3. Meanwhile, heat a large nonstick skillet over medium heat. When hot, add the oil. Add the beaten eggs and swirl to coat the bottom of the pan with the thinnest possible layer of egg. Cook until set, about 1 minute. Remove omelet from pan to a paper towel-lined plate and when cool enough to handle, roll tightly and thinly slice. Cool completely.

3. Place the sliced lettuce over the noodles in an even layer. Top with the cucumber, cooled eggs, scallions and optional carrots and sprouts. Serve immediately or cover with plastic wrap and refrigerate for up to 8 hours. Pass the dressing after serving individual portions of salad.

Serves 6 as a side dish or light lunch or supper.

LISTEN To Life
by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

THE DIGITAL ADVANTAGE

An analog hearing instrument is a low-tech device with a tuned amplifier that can make sounds louder and can be preset to tune certain frequencies up or down. It is analogous to a car radio that is preset to a few radio stations and requires readjusting the volume and tone controls when switching stations. A digital hearing instrument, on the other hand, has its amplifier in a computer chip, which allows adjustments to be performed in a more fluid fashion. It automatically makes "station to station" adjustments between listening environments. In addition, digital instruments are capable of amplifying sounds from different locations (in front of you, rather than behind). As a result, a digital hearing instrument produces the clearest sound.

Hearing instruments have come of age, with high tech digital advancements that will surprise you. Although hearing aids today are more effective, more comfortable, and easier to use than ever before, no single hearing device is right for everyone. That's why at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, we work with you to determine the instrument(s) best suited to your needs. We carry a full selection here at 534 Main Street (Rte..18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth, and our sophisticated testing equipment is second to none in the Weymouth area. PH: 781-337-1144.

P.S. Programmable analog hearing instruments run on an analog circuit but are controlled by a computer chip. They fall somewhere between analog instruments and digital instruments in their capabilities.

Police chief seeks input

Survey, special council planned

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Chief James Hussey says community policing means reaching out to townspeople to determine what their issues are regarding crime and their quality of life.

To that end, he is in the process of drafting a comprehensive survey seeking input from residents and businesses and, with the selectmen's help, will form at Citizens Police Advisory Council to work with the police department.

Hussey told selectmen Tuesday the council should include a cross-section of the community including representatives from the schools, businesses, Council on Elder Affairs, other agencies in addition to residents. He expects the council to consist of about 10 people, who would meet about four times a year to address community problems.

He stressed the police department would not be relinquishing its responsibilities, but the council would provide guidance on how police could better serve the community.

Selectmen suggest residents interested in serving on the

A sure thing?

CEES wants assurances on sewer hookup

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It's been eight years since a grassroots citizens group in Little Harbor formed to make sure their homes would be connected to the town's sewer system. But even after years of lobbying and some significant money appropriated by successive Town Meetings for the design phase of the project — there may be no guarantees.

CEES (Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions) drew a crowd of about 40 people Monday evening at Lisa LoJacono's Nichols Road home to air concerns about the proposed Cook Estate and Cedarmere developments seeking access the town's sewer system and potentially getting ahead of Little Harbor. LoJacono sent out an "S.O.S" [Save Our Sewer] to her neighbors, who responded to the call.

CEES members — many of whose septic systems would not pass a Title 5 inspection — are concerned that any available capacity at the plant could be eaten up by the multi-unit developments, if they are successful in hooking up, and kill their hopes to sewer some 300 homes in the expanded Little Harbor District that includes Atlantic Avenue. [Title 5 is the state environmental code governing septic systems and can require homeowners to make expensive upgrades upon sale or transfer of their property.] They are also worried that allowing one new development to hookup would open up Pandora's Box, so to

Asphalt floated as sidewalk pick

Village people provide update

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

For the Downtown Revitalization Review Committee — less has turned out to be more.

After years of debate over sidewalk materials, the new committee has reached the consensus that asphalt would be more suitable and easier to maintain than brick or concrete.

It is not clear if changing the sidewalk material, which is less expensive than brick or concrete, would require a Town Meeting vote because Town Meeting opted for concrete last fall.

But, nevertheless, if all goes as planned and the project is phased in this fall and next spring, there would still be time to take the sidewalk issue back to the special Town Meeting and not delay construction in the village.

The streetscape committee has essentially "tweaked" other aspects of Waterfield Design Group's plans for village revitalization and doesn't think the

Historic village building has yet another story to tell

Atlantic Bagel is moving downtown

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It's highly unlikely Newcomb Bates ever had a bagel. But the blacksmith, who built one of Cohasset's most historic village houses back in 1802, would no doubt be pleased that the aroma from baking the ring-shaped rolls will soon emanate from the structure.

Dan Belz, a Cohasset resident, and owner of the Atlantic Bagel on Route 3A, is remodeling the house at 45-47 South Main St. to accommodate the popular bagel and coffee shop. He'll be vacating the 3A site near Good Sport and plans to open in the village by mid August.

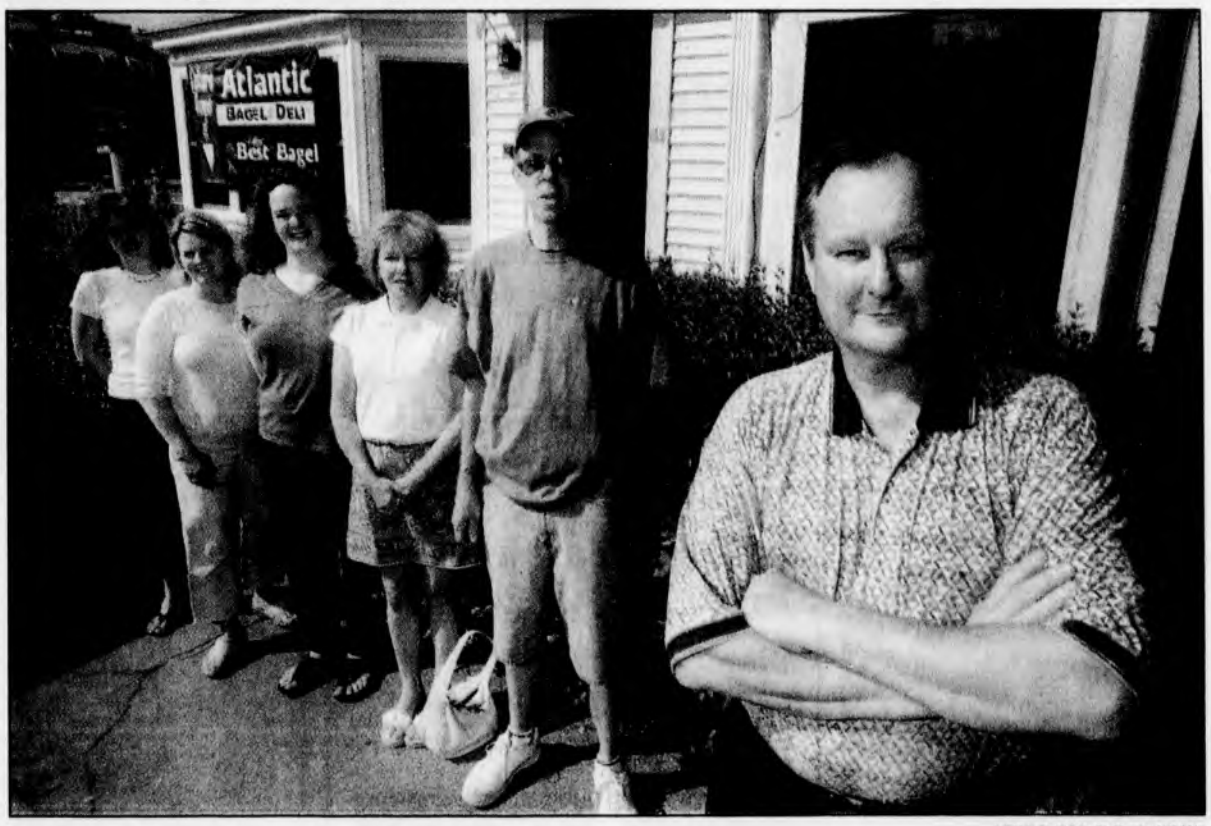
Belz isn't nervous about leaving the busy highway.

"Ninety percent of my customers are from Cohasset," he says. "We drew few people who were traveling up and down the highway, and had no walkers and no bikes.

"This is the perfect opportunity," he says.

Belz should know what he's talking about. He also owns the popular Atlantic Bagel in Hingham Centre (not to be confused with Hingham Square). The Centre is a small village on the section of Hingham's Main Street that departs from Rte. 228, near Dependable Cleaners.

"Atlantic Bagel in Hingham Centre is more of a meeting place than a drive-in," he says.



Belz, who is a real estate consultant and facilities manager, is also not concerned about competition in Cohasset Village, which has several eateries including the Village Butcher Shop & Deli on Brook Street. "We all have slightly different menus," he points out.

"Ninety percent of my customers are from Cohasset."

Belz's wife, Christine, is in charge of the bagel shop. They have three children: Erik who's on his way to Harvard; Aly, a 10th-grader; and Stefi, who's in the ninth grade.

Correction to story about DiNero's plans

David Sorgman, manager of design for Bay Planning Company Inc. in Weymouth, gave the presentation on DiNero's expansion plans to the planning board on June 23, not Dave Mackwell of Kelly Engineering as reported in last week's Mariner.

Quotes in the story should have been attributed to Mr. Sorgman.

Bay Planning is the designer for the project. Kelly Engineering is a civil engineering firm that was hired by Bay Planning as subcontractors for the project.

The Mariner apologizes for the errors.

Town Manager search committee

Selectmen want to get the Town Manager Search Committee rolling while another committee reviews the Town Manager Act, itself.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said appointing the committee sooner rather than later was critical.

"The focus of this board is to hire a full-time, permanent town manager," she said.

She said acting Town Manager Michael Buckley is doing a great job, but is doing two jobs – serving as town manager and director of finance.

"We need to move as soon as possible," she said.

The discussion sparked some debate over the makeup of the search committee. Selectman Ralph Dormitzer questioned what the selection criteria for the search committee would be.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said usually a search committee consists of two or three citizens at large and representatives from various town boards.

Selectmen would have the ultimate responsibility for selecting the town manager, not the committee which would narrow down the field of candidates.

Dormitzer said it was important to find people to serve on the search committee "who are good at this and experienced at this."

Interested citizens should contact the selectmen's office at 781-383-4105.

Sparks fly over Greenbush plans

Greenbush is coming — just drive through Hingham or Scituate — where construction has begun in earnest. But to Tom Gruber, who served as chairman of the Greenbush Mitigation Committee, says Cohasset has its head in the sand, so to speak, and isn't taking an aggressive enough stance with the MBTA over train issues.

Selectmen asked Gruber to hold off his presentation so the subject could be placed on a future meeting agenda but he insisted on making a public statement Tuesday night.

Gruber described the relationship between the town and the MBTA as a "love fest" and said the town was treating the MBTA as a benevolent organization, which it is not, he said.

He presented a list of 15 questions to selectmen ranging from who is in charge of the Greenbush project in town, to why hasn't the town worked with other towns affected by Greenbush, and who has the list of all the Greenbush issues.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer agreed with Gruber that the town was not getting what it was paying for in terms of an ombudsman, which is being handled by the Waterfield Design Group.

Two business owners in attendance also complained their issues hadn't been addressed and they were sent in "circles" trying to get answers.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan thought some of the problem is a result of turnover in the town manager position. Acting Town Manager Michael Buckley had not been involved with Greenbush issues at all before being appointed, he said.

Sullivan said Greenbush and the Cook Estate would be on the agenda for next week's selectmen's meeting that gets underway at 7:30 p.m., Tuesday.

Selectmen may also form a committee to monitor MBTA issues, he said. Interested citizens should contact the selectmen's office at 781-383-4105.

Beaches closed after trash and sewage wash ashore

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Health officials suspect the trash and sewage that washed up on Sandy Beach Sunday was illegally dumped into the sea from a large boat.

Robin Lawrence, who sits on the board of health and is president of the Sandy Beach Association, said the beach was closed at 10 a.m. Sunday. It remained closed Monday and Tuesday pending test results of the water.

Lawrence said a substantial amount of trash washed up — including plastic bottles and detergent boxes, and then a substance that looked like sewage floated ashore with each rolling wave.

In addition to Sandy Beach, four other areas were also closed: Black Rock Beach, Sandy Cove, the yacht club and the sailing club.

The Department of Environmental Protection was notified along with the U.S. Coast Guard. Dumping trash and sewage from boats is illegal unless in the open ocean, Lawrence said.

"The DEP informed me that no sewage treatment plants had overflow issues in the area," he said. "It is probably a boat that jettisoned its trash and pumped its tanks."

According to a spokesman with the U.S. Coast Guard, under federal law sewerage and garbage can be disposed off no closer than three nautical miles off shore. Garbage must be biodegradable; plastic is never allowed to be dumped at sea, according to Chief Petty Officer Scott Carr.

Lawrence said the trash filled several large bags during the cleanup along Sandy Beach.

The tests, which determine the enteroccocci level in the water to see if it is safe to swim, came back negative on Tuesday so the beaches have all reopened, Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said.

Utility bill puts school budget in red

Town side also has big deficit

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The school department will use the installment plan to cover an electric utility bill, which arrived in late April, and is $90,000 more than estimated.

That wasn't the only "red" selectmen saw Tuesday night, when they also learned the town side of the budget that includes school unemployment has a $314,621 deficit for fiscal year 2004, which ended June 30, acting Town Manager Michael Buckley said.

Although the school electric bill covers the late winter months of fiscal year 2004, it will be paid from FY'05 funds, School Committee Chairman Rick Shea explained.

Shea said the bill was based on the actual meter reading and not estimates.

He said the school department was able to reach an agreement with the electric company to pay the bill over six months.

Shea explained the school committee would analyze its fiscal year 2005 budget over the next few weeks to see what potential offsets there may be to cover the bill.

"By mid September, we'll have a good idea where we stand," Shea said.

School utility usage has increased with the newly expanded Deer Hill and middle-high schools. Because of that, the school committee has not been able to establish a utility cost trend over recent years, although Shea pointed out the utilities' line item in the FY04 budget was increased substantially over the prior year.

In FY03, the schools had a $260,000 deficit due to increased utility usage and enacted conservation measures such as automatic timers on lights to help reduce costs.

On the town side legal bills for FY04 ran about $80,000 higher than budgeted; other deficits include school and town unemployment benefits, about $85,000; snow and ice deficit of nearly $50,000, and police overtime about $65,000.

Some of the smaller deficits, such as $6,000 for selectmen's telephone and $13,767 for Medicare, can be funded through reserved fund and departmental transfers that must be approved by the advisory committee, Buckley said. Other deficits can be covered by free cash or money from the stabilization fund at the fall Special Town Meeting.

Buckley explained a new state law allows end-of-the-year budget transfers as long as they don't exceed a certain threshold. Money cannot be transferred out of the school budget, however.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan asked that Selectman Ronnie McMorris, who is a lawyer, and Buckley sit down with Town Counsel to go over every aspect of the legal bill, which is an issue every year.

McMorris also floated asking the sewer commission to cover its own legal bills through sewer rates, the way the water commission does.

plans need an expensive overhaul.

The committee stressed enhancing the natural beauty of the village through exposing granite ledge and adding trees and grassy areas. The granite removed from the ledge under St. Stephen's to widen the sidewalk there could be used to enhance other areas.

Some parking has been restored under the committee's recommendations. Plans for decorative light poles have been eliminated.

The committee also stressed that existing granite street curbing should be used. Plans are to lower South Main Street by about 6 inches, down to the original macadam and that would expose more of the granite curbing.

Phil Smith, a member of the committee and village-area resident for some 35 years, said the review committee discovered the village is basically fine the way it is – it just needs to be maintained, spruced up and made more attractive.

He said exposing the ledge off Elm Street between Hub Shipping and the police department would be one way to enhance the village character.

"Like anything in life, things change," Smith said. "But we want to keep the old-time look we love."

Plans are to delay the bid process for a couple of weeks to allow Waterfield to incorporate changes into the plans. The committee also wants to come up with a recommendation on the Depot Court-Ripley Road-Pleasant St. and the Brook-South Main streets intersections.

"The bottom line is we want to keep things the way they are now – the parking works, the sidewalks work – they need upgrading and to be made more attractive with landscaping," Selectman Ronnie McMorris said.

The wires that cross over the street would be put underground with the potential for undergrounding all the utilities some time in the future.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer, who sits on the streetscape committee, said at their next meeting selectmen needed to extend the bid process, and decide if the sidewalks need to go back to Town Meeting.

It also needs to be determined if the MBTA will pay for improvements to the Depot Court-Pleasant St.-Ripley Road intersection which is near the railroad tracks.

The $1.8 Village Revitalization Project has been in the works for upwards of seven years and is being paid for by grants and private donations.

council should call the selectmen's office at 781-383-4105 or stop by Town Hall.

Hussey said some recruiting from town agencies might be necessary to insure there is a cross-section on the council that would also include the chief himself, and a representative from the police union.

Hussey said his goal is to first see what the results of the survey are. He hopes to have the council formed in early September in order to have the first meeting in the early fall.

Hussey said the town-wide survey would be ready in a couple of weeks. Plans are to print the survey in the Cohasset Mariner and also have extra copies of the survey around town at places like the library for people who may not subscribe to the paper.

(Editor's note: the Mariner will provide space for the survey at no cost).

Shards for 26 years will continue to include Karen Stockwell's Cohasset Dog Wash, a dog-grooming business, in a small wing on the right of the building. Wendy Addison and Darilynn Evans are opening "Rooms in Bloom," a gift and home-decorating shop in the former apartment on the other side of the antique house. The four residential apartments will remain upstairs.

In addition to interior renovations to house the bagel business, Belz is installing public restrooms and making the building handicapped accessible.

The "low-carb" craze doesn't faze Belz, who says there's no substitute for a fresh bagel. "Our bagels are boiled and baked everyday on site," he says. "We use all fresh ingredients and no preservatives."

Belz bought the building from Sue Straley of Cards 'n Shards for about $980,000. He will employ one or two full-time and four-to-five part-time staffers, depending on the day. Hours will be 6 a.m. to 3 p.m., and possibly to 5 p.m. in the summer. Plans also include a patio area for customers to eat outside. He says Atlantic Bagel does an equal amount of business at breakfast and lunch time.

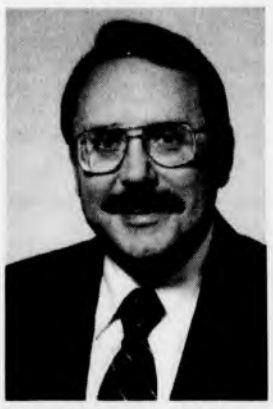
Interestingly, it won't be the first time lunch will be served in the place. The antique house provided the setting for the deli in the 1987 movie, "Witches of Eastwick," much of which was filmed in Cohasset. Not many places can claim "Jack Nicholson ate here."

But Belz says that won't be not the building's only claim to fame.

"One dollar for a bagel with butter," he says. "You can't beat that price."

House has an interesting history

Newcomb Bates, a blacksmith, built the house at 45-47 S. Main St. about 1802. He married Lydia Nichols, served as an ensign in the War of 1812, Colonel of the Militia, and for many years was a Deacon of the First Parish Church.



Subsequently, Dr. Charles Burr Bridgham of Maine owned the house. While a student at Harvard Medical School, on the outbreak of the Civil War, he entered the Army as an assistant surgeon. He was taken prisoner at the first battle of Bull Run, but was paroled. He returned to Maine, entered Bowdoin Medical School, and graduated in 1863. He then entered the 54th Massachusetts Regiment [featured in the movie "Glory"] as assistant surgeon under Col. Robert Gould Shaw and was at Fort Wagner when Col. Shaw was killed. Dr. Bridgham moved to Cohasset in 1887 to establish his practice in town and became a prominent member of the community. The house was involved in a major fire on Dec. 26, 1895 that almost destroyed the village. Dr. Bridgham is credited with having saved the house himself.

Not One Minute Longer Than Necessary

John C. Benanti, MD
Chairman, Department of Emergency Medicine

Nobody wants to go to a hospital emergency room. But almost all of us end up there, seeking medical care for a loved one or ourselves. Most of us know all too well about waiting, sometimes for hours, for that care to be provided.

Emergency rooms in general — and South Shore Hospital's in particular — are busier than ever. Nationally, there are more than 114 million ER visits annually, a number that has risen 16 percent since 1996. There are 75,000 patient visits to South Shore Hospital's emergency department every year, making it the second busiest in Eastern Massachusetts. Many visits are prompted by life-threatening conditions, others don't involve true emergencies. Federal law prohibits us, however, from turning any emergency patient away — even if their condition would be better (and perhaps more quickly) addressed in a physician's office or clinic.

South Shore Hospital has developed the region's most comprehensive emergency services: more staff, more beds, and more technology than anywhere else. I joined the hospital as chairman of the department of emergency medicine in January 2004 because I was impressed by the 350 physicians, nurses, clinicians and support staff who put their considerable talent and skills to work each day to address every conceivable type of emergency.

As more people choose our emergency care, it makes our ED very busy and can produce waits. Caring for an average of 200 patients each day stresses our systems, despite doubling the size of our department two years ago. In addition, our emergency patients are so sick that more of them need hospitalization than the Massachusetts average. Their diagnoses and treatments take longer and can periodically delay care being provided to others.

In response to these challenges, numerous initiatives have been underway to enhance experiences in our emergency department. Our improvements started long before recent publicity, and are focused on how patients are prioritized, evaluated by a physician, diagnosed, treated, and admitted or discharged.

Initiatives that have been underway include:

- Assuring that every patient is greeted by a triage registered nurse, who is expertly trained in initially assessing symptoms related to medical and surgical emergencies.
- Using a nationally acclaimed five-level triage system — instead of the previous three levels — to refine how we prioritize which patients are in greatest need of care.
- Enhancing our staffing, by adding triage nurses to assess and prioritize patients and scheduling more nurses and physicians to work during our busiest shifts.
- Expanding the role of our emergency department concierge staff, so that they can be even more responsive to patients and families in our waiting room.
- Expediting our system for admitting patients to the hospital, thanks to the support of our 700-member medical staff.

We know that people are increasingly frustrated when it seems their doctors, hospitals, and emergency rooms are giving them less attention. Chronic underfunding of health care over many years is having an impact. In Massachusetts, there are 28 fewer hospitals and 40 percent fewer hospital beds than 15 years ago, straining the system.

No one at South Shore Hospital wants a single patient to wait one minute longer than necessary for emergency care. But when a dozen ambulances arrive within an hour -- or physicians' offices are closed — it is possible that those with less urgent conditions will experience waits. Should that happen, you have our commitment that we will work as expediently as quality care allows — and that we will keep you informed about delays.

Want to help us enhance our emergency services? Consider joining the Friends of Emergency Care. This dynamic community group provides feedback to our emergency department staff. I regularly attend their meetings and encourage you to join us. Please call (781) 340-4170 for details.

Gibbons named chief of surgery

Gary W. Gibbons, MD, FACS, a nationally recognized leader in the field of diabetic and vascular surgery, has been named chief of surgery at Quincy Medical Center.

Gibbons will oversee surgical services, including programs in general surgery, minimally invasive/laparoscopic surgery, colorectal surgery, cosmetic surgery, ear, nose and throat surgery, gynecologic surgery, orthopedic surgery, podiatric (foot) surgery, and vascular surgery.

Gibbons joined Quincy Medical Center in 2000 through the Alliance for Quality with Boston Medical Center (BMC). He is executive director of BMC Foot Care Specialists, a multi-disciplinary practice specializing in the prevention and treatment of the diabetic wound and foot problems. He also is a member of BMC Surgical Associates, a multi-specialty group of surgeons who practice at QMC. A board-certified general and vascular surgeon, Gibbons is a pioneer of the Dorsalis Pedis Bypass, or Foot Bypass Surgery. The procedure works to restore proper circulation to the feet, avoiding amputation for patients with diabetic foot problems.

"Dr. Gibbons has the experience and expertise to develop programming to blend the surgical resources of our community-based surgeons with our tertiary partners at Boston Medical Center to further enhance surgical services at Quincy Medical Center," says Christine C. Schuster, president and CEO of Quincy Medical. "The ability of Quincy Medical Center to provide high quality community-based care with the flair of an academic medical center provides enormous benefits for patients, families and the communities we serve," said Dr. Gibbons.

Gibbons received his medical degree from the University of Cincinnati in 1971 and completed residencies at Boston Medical Center and the New England Deaconess Hospital. He is an international lecturer on the subject of diabetic foot and vascular surgery and has published several articles in clinical journals and book chapters on the subjects. He is a Professor of Surgery at Boston University School of Medicine.

Quincy Medical Center (www.quincymc.org) is a 232-bed acute care community-teaching hospital providing South Shore residents with comprehensive medical and surgical services.

speak, for the others to follow suit.

But Sewer Commission Chairman Ray Kasperowicz said, in his view, the Little Harbor District has nothing to worry about in terms of capacity. Plans are in the works to upgrade the town's sewer treatment plant off Elm Street that would increase the capacity there by about 150,000 gallons per day that would be reserved for Little Harbor, Kasperowicz said. "That's etched in granite," he said about the future capacity. If the project moves along, Little Harbor could be sewered by the end of the decade.

He said projects, such as Cedarmere and the Cook Estate, aren't competing for that capacity but are seeking any potential excess capacity that exists at the plant now. The plant is permitted to treat 300,000 per day but is designed to handle 400,000. In dry months usage is averaging about 200,000 gallons per day and in wet months about 328,000 gallons, he said.

Any excess capacity that may exist now is for the Central Sewer District and not Little Harbor, Kasperowicz said. In other words, the capacity for Little Harbor doesn't yet exist and won't until the plant is upgraded. The plant upgrade project would add additional treatment membranes but not expand the current plant's footprint, he said.

Cedarmere, which does not think the town can legally reserve capacity, and the Cook Estate, a project that won Town Meeting support, both lie outside the Central District. Cedarmere developers have said they would help upgrade the plant and cleanup the leakage problems, which would create enough capacity for Little Harbor to connect along with their project.

Kasperowicz said the sewer commission is proposing two articles for the fall Special Town Meeting that, if passed, would put the issue of expanding the Central District before the voters. One would create a home rule petition, similar to those in Provincetown and Nantucket that would have the force of law. Therefore, if a developer comes in and wants to hookup and there is sufficient capacity, he would need Town Meeting approval to be added to the district — without that, he would have no option apart from an on-site system. "It would insulate us from lawsuits, like Cedarmere's," Kasperowicz said.

The other article would change the town's bylaw allowing Town Meeting to accept or reject any district, which could still be challenged in the courts. He said the bylaw would buy the town some time until the home rule petition made its way through the legislative process at the State House, which could take upwards of 18 months.

Kasperwicz said the home rule petition would allow the sewer commission to "take things in a linear fashion and not being pulled in 10 different ways." It would also allow the voters to opt to take care of existing homes first. He described the pressure from developments such as the Cook Estate, Cedarmere, Avalon and Jerusalem Road Estates, the selectmen (who back the Cook Estate) and planning board (that approved Cedarmere) as a "full court press."

The town is under a court order to solve its wastewater problems resulting from failed septic systems that were polluting water bodies. Under the legal pact, the town has to develop a wastewater management plan. In lieu of subjecting the Little Harbor homeowners to septic system inspections and forced upgrades, the town opted to pursue sewering the area.

According to officials at Monday's meeting, the town will meet with the state Department of Environmental Protection on July 21 at the DEP office in Boston to discuss the town's progress under the court agreement.

CEES is not comfortable with the bylaw and home rule petition supported by the sewer commission that would give Town Meeting control over sewer districts. LoJacono said Town Meetings can be "a beauty contest" and noted she voted for the Cook Estate project because town officials at the time gave assurances soils at the site would be able to handle an on-site septic system.

Richard Brooks, 68 Nichols Road, said he's seen strange things happen at Town Meeting. "I've seen articles voted at the start and then brought back at 11 p.m.," he said.

There were also concerns raised whether Little Harbor is in fact an official sewer district and Kasperowicz said he would ask Town Counsel to be sure.

CEES, which is seeking a 50 percent town subsidy to sewer Little Harbor, is also worried that asking the rest of the town to support the project with tax dollars won't be popular at Town Meeting. Developers can pay the town to hook up, making it a more attraction option.

"Sharing the cost of this puts us in a dangerous situation," LoJacono said, adding once people are sewered they no longer care about sharing the cost for others to connect.

The expanded Central District and North Cohasset Sewer District were paid for 50 percent with tax dollars and 50 percent by the users. CEES says the town should pay for the expanded plant and street work, and Little Harbor District homeowners would pay for their own lines from the street and grinder pumps that would equal the same 50-50 split.

LoJacono said that, according to CEES' lawyer, DEP could grant a Title 5 amnesty provision for Little Harbor area homeowners whose septic systems aren't health hazards because of the promise of the sewer. But there would have to be a guarantee the sewer is coming.

"The DEP doesn't want homeowners to have to pay for a new septic system when they're going to get the sewer," she explained.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer, who attended the meeting, said the issue is not so simple. He said it may all come down to money — there is no money in the budget to sewer Little Harbor. Making matters worse, the debt service for the town, which recently expanded and refurbished two schools among other projects, will soar over the next few years. Dormitzer said the best hope for Little Harbor is to have installing sewers in the district incorporated into the court order, dubbed the Second Amended Final Judgment.

"In my view you have to get the amended judgment to include requiring this be tied in given the financial aspect of the town," said Dormitzer, who indicated the issue could be raised at the June 21 meeting with the DEP.

The town has spent upwards of $500,000 since 1998 in support of sewering Little Harbor.

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

RUNNER HELPS FIGHT CANCER

On Aug. 8, nearly 10,000 runners will line up at the start of the SBLI Falmouth Road Race with an eye on the finish line that is 7.1 miles away. For 35 runners, there is an additional goal in sight — a world without cancer.

Ken Gritzan of Cohasset will be running to raise money for cancer research along with 34 others. He has committed to raising at least $750 for the Claudia Adams Barr Program in Innovative Basic Cancer Research at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute in Boston. The Barr Program funds important studies that hold the promise of achieving major advances in understanding, overcoming, and eventually eliminating cancer. One hundred percent of the funds raised goes to the Barr Program.

A limited number of guaranteed entries are available to runners who are raising funds for one of several charities. Last year the charity program was responsible for raising more than $350,000. To contribute to Gritzan's run, send checks payable to "Dana-Farber Cancer Institute" to DFMC, 10 Brookline Place West, Brookline, MA 02445-7226, or go to www.danafarber.org/dfmc.

Treetop retreat at root of family fun

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Having a tree house in the backyard is a dream shared by children of all ages. For Stephen, Christian, and Nathan Bumstead, it is a dream that has not only come true, but is surpassing their wildest expectations.

In their Nichols Road backyard, hoisted up on a great holly tree, their tree house stands tall, complete with a rope swing, outside deck, and crow's nest. But what sets this tree house apart from the others is the list of amenities it has, including electricity, Pergo floors, and a sliding glass door.

While building the smallest of tree houses takes much work and patience, building the Bumstead tree house required work, patience, and an architect. Lisa LoJacono, mother of the boys, said she hired Jonathan Fairoaks, a certified arborist who has been building tree houses for 41 years to complete the job.

"It was a very interesting experience," said LoJacono, adding it was well worth it as it has become a great way for the family to spend time together in a fun setting.

While most parents might not enjoy making the trek up to play in a tree house, LoJacono said she and her fiancé, Joe Offerman, often spend time in the boughs with the boys. With beadboard gracing the walls to the height of a chair rail, windows that open on every wall, a loft space, two futons and a television, it's almost like being at home. She said they often have family night in the tree house, and order pizza and watch movies together.

One of the most interesting features of the tree house is that the holly tree which supports the structure is alive and growing right up through the floor. LoJacono said she often comes out to the tree house with a spray bottle to wet the leaves of the tree which sprout from little branches on the trunk.

Initially, interest in constructing a tree house in the backyard stemmed from a series of books called, "The Magic Treehouse," written by Mary Pope Osbourne, which the boys had been reading at school. The books tell the tale of some children who find magical books in a tree house, and just by pointing to a picture get whisked away on a journey to wherever they want to go. The boys thought it would be great to have their very own tree house to spark their imaginations, and LoJacono and Offerman were happy to oblige.

In fact, LoJacono said the house is just as much Offerman's as the boys, as he was much of the driving force behind making the dream come to life. LoJacono said a tree house is something Offerman always wanted, and when the boys showed enough interest to give him the green light to get going on the project, he really pursued it. She said Offerman was working at a building next to the World Trade Center on September 11, and he lost a lot of friends that day, and planning for and building the tree house gave him something positive to focus on.

Fairoaks and his crew stayed with the family for two weeks during construction, which began in July of last year. They began by constructing the base, and built up from there. For stability, a roughly 35-foot telephone pole was brought to the yard, and had to be lifted by a crane with a 90 foot boom.

Once the walls were in place, vinyl siding was installed and a tin roof was put on top. LoJacono said they chose a tin roof because of the sound the rain makes when it splashes down. By Labor Day, the house was complete and ready for the fun to begin. "It's been a wonderful haven for family time," LoJacono said.

LoJacono said the project has has a loft space which can accommodate all three for campouts. The boys enjoy having their friends over for sleepover parties, and even LoJacono has spent a few nights in the tree house loft. The family dog's electric fence is also set up to allow her to come into the tree house, making sure no one is left out. "It's all about the family," she said.

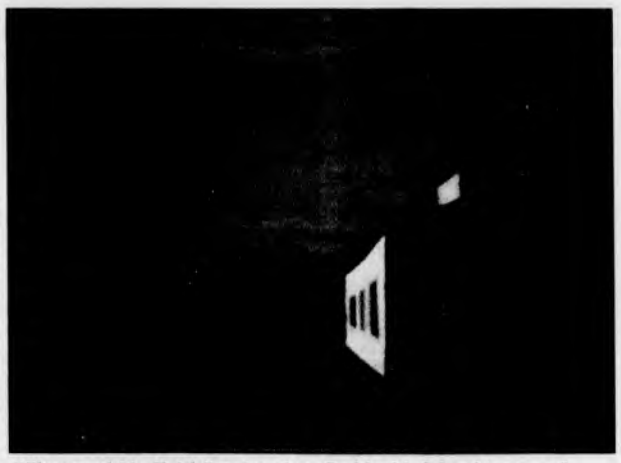
Alix White connects with her artistic roots

Opens exhibit of landscapes

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM



To those who know Cohasset's Alix White personally, it will come as no surprise that "accomplished artist" is now added to her long list of achievements.

The mother of three — who is also an environmentalist, farmer and former town official — hasn't had enough time in recent years to devote to one of her first loves: painting and drawing.

But after selling White Cedar Farm off Jerusalem Road last year where White and her husband, David Bigley, grew organic fruit and produce for restaurants and sold eggs to home customers in Cohasset, White found she could direct more energy toward her artwork.

The result of that renewed focus is featured along with pieces she's produced over the past two decades in an exhibit dubbed, "Weather Report," at the South Shore Natural Science Center off Jacobs Lane in Norwell. Her collection is on display through Aug. 30.

Visitors to the exhibit will find familiar scenes of the South Shore, featuring World's End in Hingham, the North River, the Gulf River, and Young's Boatyard in Scituate, to name a few.

"Shuttered Up Faith" painted on Peddock's Island is one of Alix White's landscapes that are on display.

The centerpiece of the exhibit is the 48 inch by 50 inch "The Cloud of Unknowing" – a spectacular combination of sea and sky awash in shades of blue and white that depicts a cumulous cloud floating over a peaceful ocean.

The special reception Saturday afternoon heralding the showing turned into an impromptu reunion that included family and friends.

"I'm very impressed with the range of work," says Linda Keller of Cohasset. "There are a lot of styles I'm seeing here and there's a wonderful feeling of the South Shore."

Cohasset's Margo Cheel, who is also an artist and has had White as a student, says the paintings have a wonderful sense of place.

Cheel thought the title of the exhibit "Weather Report" was apropos because much of White's work has to do with the outside. But, she noted, "weather" in White's work is through the eye of an artist and therefore is not a compilation of data and statistics that meteorologists like to report. "There's a sense of feeling, a sense of color," she said.

Cheel explained she teaches a recurring class that White has participated in on several occasions. "Alix would say, 'this is what charges me and helps me focus,'" Cheel says.

Bigley, White's husband, noted the exhibit covered two decades of work.

"It's really nice to see it all displayed in one place and to be surrounded by friends," he said during Saturday's reception.

White said she went to art school and always knew she wanted to paint. "But I had children, then the farm – I kept painting but couldn't do it full time," she says.

White, who is a former member of the Cohasset Board of Health and recycling committee, says painting is a way she can connect with the natural environment that she loves.

"Painting makes you a real observer – you really see what is there in the landscape," she says. To White, drawing and painting is a form of prayer, a way she can meditate.

"Painting makes you a real observer – you really see what is there in the landscape."

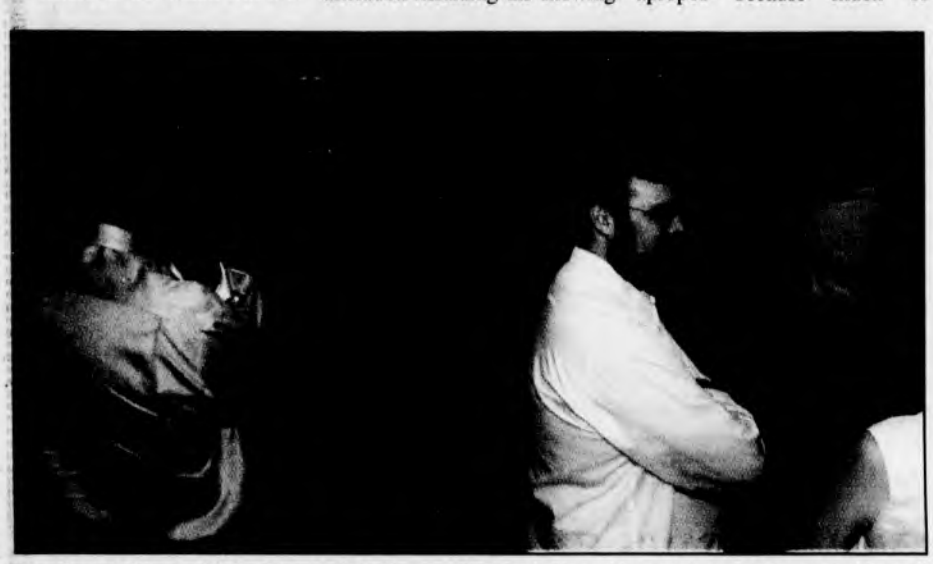
She and Bigley have three children: Morgan, 23, Deirdre, 20 and Aaron, 16. When White had her last art show, she was pregnant with Deirdre.

White's mother, Constance White, was also on hand Saturday. Brimming with pride, she couldn't stop smiling and noted her daughter is fulfilling the early promise she showed in art school.

"She's painted from time to time all her life," says Mrs. White, pointing out that motherhood happily sidelined her daughter's ability to paint full time. But now, she can realize that potential.



White agrees, saying she's believes she is meant to do many things in her life. She lives on James Lane and also works as a home health aide.

White explains it can take six to seven months to complete a painting; she usually sketches the scene on location and then paints the piece in her studio.

Larry and Inge Miller knew White and Bigley when they were both young couples and neighbors in Cambridge more than 20 years ago. In fact Inge was one of White's first portrait models. Over the years the couples drifted apart. The show provided a reason to get together again.

"They're beautiful," said Inge about the paintings. "What a nice way to be reunited."

"Weather Report" is on display through Aug. 30 at the Vine Hall Gallery, South Shore Natural Science Center, Jacobs Lane, Norwell.. 781-659-2559. www.ssnsc.org.

Hitting the right note

Walk into almost any school on the South Shore and you'll see first hand the devastating impact our tight economic climate has had on the arts. In some schools, music teachers are forced to hold sessions in hallways or cafeterias because the schools are overcrowded. In others, art teachers end up spending so much of their own money to provide the necessary tools students need to learn and develop a lifelong appreciation the arts.

In one school we know everyone is forced to play a wind instrument because there isn't enough money right now to purchase other instruments. Arts teachers are being forced to shuttle between three and four different schools in some towns because positions are being reduced to save money.

It seems the arts in the schools are the first to take the hit in many municipal budgets. But fortunately for our region, there are many gifted and generous benefactors who understand the vibrancy of the arts in a thriving community. A case in point — the organizers spearheading the effort to develop a $3.5 million Center for the Arts at the South Shore Conservatory in Hingham.

The Conservatory's new center offers a number of teaching studios, three classrooms for performances, two galleries, along with a host of other things. It is a welcoming place where those who share a love and commitment to the arts can join forces.

Next Saturday, July 25, the public is invited to see the Conservatory's new $3.5 million Center for the Arts and is encouraged to participate in several upcoming fundraising events to pay for the 11,000 square foot facility.

Through the years the Conservatory has played a key role in helping shape and encourage arts in our communities. Since it was first established more than 30 years ago, the Conservatory has become one of the largest community arts schools in the state. The Conservatory reports it has worked with more than 3,000 students in more than 45 communities in suburban Boston. It has facilities in Hingham and Duxbury.

The Conservatory has helped inspire countless artists and musicians of all ages over the last several decades. Programs are offered for the young and old alike, featuring art, drama and dance to name a few. The Conservatory, through its "Arts Partners" program has also been providing needed outreach programs in schools where arts funding has been particularly hard hit.

Without question, the Conservatory has been a true community success story. We encourage readers, if they aren't already familiar with the thriving center, to check it out, see what it has to offer and figure out ways they can provide some assistance — whether it be financial or otherwise.

Construction ahead

Take a trip to Scituate's Greenbush section or to Hingham Square, and the fact the train is coming really hits home. Both areas are construction zones.

Scituate is the end of the line where the layover station is being built and Hingham Square is in the throes of tunnel work that also requires relocating Town Brook that flows under the downtown area.

Maybe because of the fact Greenbush is staring them in the face, our neighbors to the north and south seem to have their collective acts together regarding the MBTA and the issues they face during train construction.

Cohasset hasn't been affected in terms of actual construction but the design work is going on.

Both towns have "Greenbush go-to people" who are also appearing on local cable-TV with Cashman liaison Tom Carroll to provide updates. Cashman Balfour Beatty, a joint venture, is building the train.

Tom Gruber, who worked hard as chairman of the Cohasset Greenbush Mitigation Committee, is concerned that selectmen aren't insuring the town is adequately protected and aren't dealing with the MBTA in an aggressive enough manner. He says when it comes to dealing with the state agency, one can't be aggressive enough.

Here at the Mariner, we have supported Greenbush from the get-go. But we also want to hold the MBTA's feet to the fire, so to speak, and make sure Cohasset gets the best train possible.

Selectmen have now agreed to put Greenbush concerns on the agenda for their next meeting and may appoint a Greenbush oversight committee.

If you share Mr. Gruber's concerns, please attend and let your voice be heard.

Stop 'remuddling' with the Town Manager Act

TO THE EDITOR:

Last week's Mariner, as usual, had a wealth of informative articles and letters, including one from Ralph Dormitzer, which provided an excellent history or why the voters decided in 1997 to pass the Town Manager Act. Basically, it was because managing the town's operations and business had become much too complicated and demanding to be handled adequately by a clutch of part-time committee people with no adequately trained individual in full time charge of conducting the people's business.

The Act clearly implies that the Town Manager is to be supervised by the elected Board of Selectmen, and does not imply that he or she is an independent operator. Rather than set up some supervisory committee consisting of a few selectmen and a few unelected members, it would be commonsensical simply to have the Selectmen do their job of supervising.

During the debate on the Act, there was some chatter about divorcing financial controls from the Town Manager's function, and establishing a Chief Financial Officer reporting separately to the Selectmen. However most people recognized that it's ridiculous to separate the management of the expenditures from the actions the Town Manager needs take which require the expenditures!. (Of course, when the principal function of the proposed Financial Officer is to raise money, as in most businesses, while leaving the management and the spending that goes with it to the Chief Executive Officer, two people may be desirable. But Cohasset doesn't need that extra person and that separation of responsibilities; the combination of Town Manager, Selectmen, Accountant, and volunteers with financial expertise serving on relevant committees can continue to serve us adequately in that respect).

Selectman Dormizer is correct in recommending contracts of significant dollar value be reviewed by the selectmen, and that contracts contain performance criteria, provision for audit etc. But such requirements should be set out in a set of Standard Operating Procedures developed by or for the Selectmen, and not included as boiler plate in a revised Act! (There is nothing wrong with the Town Manager helping establish the SOP's; he or she may have the experience and/or special training to provide expert help, without the Selectmen losing control of the final result).

To maintain some uniformity in personnel matters, and to ensure that relevant rules are adhered to, it makes sense to focus the hiring, dismissal, compensation, promotion, etc. in the Town Manager's office. Surely we can assume that the Town Manager would base his or her actions on recommendations from the department heads. If not, the selectmen can exercise their supervisory function, as the Town Manger Act already expects them to do.

It may be true that public debate and democratic control have suffered in recent years, but diffusing the management of the people's business is not the answer. It reminds me of the term used for inept remodeling of buildings: "remuddling"! Actually, in recent years, thanks in part to a well organized Town Manager, the issues have been more clearly presented in the warrant and at Town Meeting than in years past. The real problem is poor attendance at Town Meeting, poor preparation by the attendees, stacking the house for or against a measure, lack of objective comprehension, etc. The clumsiness and inefficiency of democracy is well demonstrated in the Town Meeting system, yet we are reluctant to abandon it. Well, if we are to retain it, let's not make it worse by remuddling our management structure!

HEALTH NOTES

AEDs to make town heart-safe

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Each year, more than 250,000 Americans die from sudden cardiac arrest (SCA). SCA occurs when the arteries that supply blood to the heart become blocked, the flow of blood which carries oxygen to the heart is slowed or stopped, and the muscle fibers contract chaotically rather than in sync with each other as they normally do. Today, fewer than 5 percent of SCA victims survive, largely because defibrillators are not available to reach them in time. For each minute that passes before defibrillation therapy reaches a victim, the chances for survival decrease by about 10 percent. After 10 minutes, few attempts at resuscitation are successful.

According to medical experts, the key to survival is timely initiation of a "chain of survival", including CPR (cardiopulmonary resuscitation). Because of recent technological advances there is now a portable lifesaving device, called an "automated external defibrillator" or "AED." Trained non-medical personnel can use these simplified electronic machines to treat a person in cardiac arrest. The AED device "guides the user through the process by audible or visual prompts without requiring any discretion or judgment." The American Heart Association notes that at least 20,000 lives could be saved annually by prompt use of AEDs. Ultimately, with broad deployment of AEDs among trained responders, as many as 40,000 deaths due to sudden cardiac arrest could be prevented each year.

Cohasset has begun deployment of AEDs in town. Soon, we will have completed a plan to place units in all early emergency response vehicles for the police and fire departments. There is a unit at the board of health. There is even one at the Cohasset Golf Club. Current legislation provides for grants to pay for these devices for cities and towns and many towns, including Cohasset, have public subscription campaigns to help pay for their widest possible deployment. At this point, Cape Cod has almost universal AED coverage with every town now being rated as a heart-safe town (a town having AEDs in all of its first response vehicles). Soon Cohasset will have this designation.

Manual defibrillators work by giving the heart a controlled electric shock, forcing all the heart muscles to contract at once, and, hopefully jolting it back into a regular rhythm. Historically, only trained medical professionals were able to interpret the heart rhythms on manual defibrillator devices. However, today's new Automated External Defibrillators use embedded computer chips to analyze the rhythms instantly and accurately, making it possible for non-medical professionals to administer the same vital service without risking an accidental shock.

There are several manufacturers of these remarkable devices, but in the interests of easier training, most towns have settled on one model. Cohasset has chosen the Phillips Heart Start. This unit literally talks one through the whole procedure. Starting with unpacking and placing two electrical pads at specific locations on the torso, it senses the heart rhythms and decides whether a shock is needed and the intensity and duration. If a shock is needed, it tells the operator to press the orange shock button. The machine then delivers a highly effective defibrillation waveform of low energy therapy. If a shock is not needed, the defibrillator's voice instructions tell you how to assess the patient's condition, and to perform CPR if necessary. Then, voice instructions can be activated to coach the user on the frequency and depth of compressions. Further, the unit verbally reminds one to call emergency medical service (EMS) and should the EMS need a summary of care, the unit can verbally recount the recent events from its last clinical use. There are special pads for children which automatically adjust the therapy for infants and children. All units come with a spare battery with a five-year life.

The Fire Department is the central focus for AED activity for the town. If you have any questions, call the fire department and ask for Capt. Robert Silvia.

Come see Conservatory's $1.3M addition

Public opening is Sunday, July 25

An architect's rendering of the expanded South Shore Conservatory in Hingham.

The recently expanded South Shore Conservatory in Hingham offers a supportive arts community where students of all abilities and ages can explore their individual talents and interests. There are also opportunities for those who share a love for the arts to collaborate and perform together.

The Conservatory's new Center for the Arts offers nine teaching studios, three multi-purpose classrooms for ensembles and performances, specialized space for new programs, two galleries, and "welcoming public space." There's also a sculpture garden outside the main entrance designed by South Shore Landscape Artist Ron Rudnicki and donated by Betty Jane and Stephen Andrus of Cohasset.

The garden showcases contemporary sculptures by living artists which complement the landscaping, which includes cedar trees (the entire area was once called Cedar Hill), maples, oaks, lilies, and other plantings.

Funds to pay for the $3.5 million, 11,000-square-foot addition are being raised through a capital campaign.

"For so long we've seen the plans on paper in two-dimensional form," said Campaign Manager Lanci Valentine. "It's exciting to see the actual building come together."

The Grand Opening weekend will feature a Donor Gala and ribbon-cutting ceremony July 23 for donors who have contributed $1,000 or more; an Evenings Under the Stars Pops Concert July 24 under the direction of Nicholas Palmer, the son of Dorothy and the late Robert Palmer; and the public opening of the South Shore Music Circus Gallery and the Robert & Dorothy Palmer Gallery July 25 from 4 to 6 p.m., featuring gallery artists from the South Shore Art Center.

Various classrooms, studios, and other portions of the addition are named in honor of other donors out of an appreciation for their generous contributions.

"This addition shows the importance role the arts play in the community and in the lives of individuals," Valentine said.

Since its inception more than three decades ago, SSC has grown into the largest community school for the arts in Massachusetts, serving more than 3,000 students from 47 communities south of Boston at its Hingham and Duxbury campuses and through its outreach programs. Some advance to professional careers while others pursue the arts for their own pleasure and as a means of expressing their creativity. By comparison, the Conservatory served 150 students when it opened in 1970.

SSC's mission is to provide access to quality education in the arts. The Conservatory offers arts-oriented pre-school programs for young children and music, dance, drama, and audio recording for students of all ages.

In addition to the Hingham and Duxbury locations, SSC offers an "Arts Partners" community outreach program which serves schools that don't offer art.

The $3.5 million construction costs are part of an overall long-range planning goal that began with the Duxbury Ellison Center for the Arts and will continue with an endowment fund and expansion of the Duxbury campus.

The Conservatory offers more than 50 courses and programs led by its 83-member faculty to students of all ages, abilities, and interests. Those include drama, dance, instrumental and vocal music, audio recording and music technology, individual lessons, group classes, and ensembles, infant and parent classes, and music therapy for adults and children.

The SSC started out as a satellite program of the New England Conservatory (NEC) in the basement of the Old Ship Church around 1970. When the NEC decided the program was no longer economically feasible, a group of parents and friends of SSC, including Dorothy Palmer, got together to find a way to keep the program going. The focus was changed to a community school for the arts for people of all ages and abilities, including gifted and talented students as well as individuals just beginning to develop a love for the arts. The name was changed to South Shore Conservatory of Music at that time. When drama and ballet programs were added, the "of Music" was dropped.

"The SSC has done nothing but grow," Valentine said.

In 1973, the late Alan Carr was instrumental in acquiring the current location while it was still under the control of the General Services Administration. The building, a former Navy Commandant's quarters when the property was used as an ammunition depot, had been vandalized.

"The Conservatory arranged to buy the building for $1, which some said reflected its market value at the time because it was in such bad shape," Valentine said.

Funds were raised to renovate the building, which has been home to the Conservatory for 34 years.

The Cox Performance Hall was added in 1980 and the Jane Carr Amphitheatre in 1995, the same year that the Conservatory's Ellison Center for the Arts campus opened in Duxbury.

Why July 16 is important

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I see where several hundred people turned out to watch the 200th anniversary reenactment of the duel between Alexander Hamilton and Vice President Aaron Burr in Weehawken, N. J., the other day.

Hamilton survived this one, if that's your question, but I have an even weightier one.

In a nation where we drop what we're doing to recall just about everything, including the making of the first fig newton (in Newton, of course), why are we ignoring July 16, which comes on Friday this year?

Over the past century, events that occurred on July 16 probably affected more people than any other day on the calendar...

Over the past century, events that occurred on July 16 probably affected more people than any other day on the calendar, except possibly the day they discovered how to brew light beer.

For instance, July 16, 1973, was the day that a minor government official named Alexander Butterfield just happened to mention before a congressional committee that conversations were taped in the Oval Office.

That eventually led to the "smoking gun" that forced Dick Nixon to resign as president and so shook up the American people that they have never fully trusted a president again, and that includes the sainted Ronnie Reagan.

July 16, 1945, was the day they tested the first atom bomb in Alamagordo, N. M., to see if it would work. It did. Twenty one days later, after two bombs were dropped on Japan, the deadliest war in history ended.

The blast that day in the New Mexican desert also gave rise to a new industry. No, not nuclear power, but a company of protesters that travels the country in an attempt to halt new nuclear plant openings and close old ones.

It's helped the cops to pile up overtime, too.

Another significant July 16 was the day in 1935 when the first parking meters, 150 of them, were installed on one side of a busy downtown shopping street in Oklahoma City.

The meters proved such a success that merchants on the meterless side demanded them, too. Seems shoppers who parked at the meters shopped and got back to their cars faster so storekeepers on the other side of the streets wanted to share in their good fortune.

Incidentally, it didn't take the chairman of the Oklahoma City Traffic Commission, one Carlton Magee, to form the Dual Parking Meter Company to make them. But don't tell Howie Carr.

As I recall, when the first parking meters hit the South Shore it cost a penny for 10 minutes and a nickel for an hour. I don't drive anymore but those who do tell me it's a quarter for a half hour in Boston now.

Going back further, July 16, 1769, was the day Father Junipero Serra founded the first settlement in California — not far from Hollywood, as a matter of fact.

And where would we be without the discovery of the 55-hour marriage by Britney Spear, the perfection of the cross-country engagement by Ben Affleck and J Lo and development of the subtle documentary by Michael Moore?

Art galleries named for generous music makers

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

One of the South Shore Conservatory's (SSC) two new galleries is named after the South Shore Music Circus (SSMC) in recognition of its generous donations over the past two decades. The other is named after Hingham resident Dorothy Palmer and her late husband, Robert.

"The South Shore Music Circus has been very supportive and understanding of the importance of the arts in our community," said fund-raising Campaign Manager Lanci Valentine.

The two galleries are part of the Conservatory's new $3.5 million addition.

"The Music Circus is a wonderful organization that has supported the Conservatory to the tune of more than $1 million over the past 15 to 20 years," including funds toward the Ellison Center for the Arts campus in Duxbury, Valentine said.

The three-story "lantern-style" SSMC gallery located in the Conservatory's entrance lobby suggests a lighthouse from the outside, paying homage to Hingham's seaside location.

Both the SSMC and the Robert & Dorothy Palmer galleries feature natural light and will be curated by the South Shore Art Center. The galleries expand upon the Conservatory's Staircase Gallery, which has featured South Shore Art Center artists for a number of years.

"The non-profit South Shore Playhouse Associates (SSPA), the parent company of the South Shore Music Circus and the Cape Cod Melody Tent in Hyannis, provides financial support through a community charitable fund to non-profit organizations on the South Shore and Cape Cod that are involved in arts education and recreation," said Cohasset resident Bruce Cameron, president of the Associates' board of directors.

During the past year, SSPA made financial contributions to more than 40 different organizations, including the South Shore Conservatory, the South Shore Art Center, the South Shore Natural Science Center, the South Shore Community Center in Cohasset, the Talking Information Center in Marshfield, Plymouth Philharmonic Orchestra, and the Hingham Symphony Orchestra.

"These types of organizations enrich life as do the Music Circus and Melody Tent," Cameron said.

SSPA has contributed to the Conservatory over the years, ranging from funds toward the purchase of a concert piano to contributing to the new addition. "The Conservatory came to us when the addition was in the conceptual stage," Cameron said. "SSC epitomizes what we're trying to do in arts education and recreation."

Upcoming SSMC offerings include Johnny Mathis, Mary Chapin Carpenter, the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra featuring Conductor Keith Lockhart, Bill Cosby, Alice Cooper, George Carlin, Kenny Loggins, Cyndi Lauper, Tony Bennett, and the Beach Boys.

Reminders for LH residents and boaters

TO THE EDITOR:

A reminder to all residents and boaters and boaters in Little Harbor.

Welcome to our new neighbors and a reminder to those who have lived here for a while.

As you are aware, Little Harbor is very special and hopefully always will be. However, it will need the cooperation of all to keep it that way.

The following bylaws were voted so that the Harbor could be enjoyed by the people who liked to swim, sail, kayak, canoe, etc. with the concern of fast operating boats.

Article 7, section 32, states "Jets skis, surf jets and water bikes shall not be operated at a speed in excess of 12 miles per hour while in the confines of Little Harbor."

Article 9, section 5, states "No person shall operate a boat in Little Harbor while towing a water skier, aqua plane or other similar device except on even numbered days."

Easy to remember.....even/fast.....odd/slow.

Just another reminder: We have a wide variety of bird life, many of whom nest on the islands and rocks. It is important to their species that these nests are not disturbed....Also, in spring and late summer many shore birds find Little Harbor sand flats a vital feeding ground on their long migration as far as Central and South America. Please respect their need to feed and rest. Dogs running and chasing them, although fun for the dog, interrupt their ability to build the necessary fat and energy to continue the migration...they all need our help!

Many thanks for your cooperation....Have a great summer!.

Attendance at train discussion is urged

TO THE EDITOR:

At last Tuesday's selectmen's meeting, Ronnie McMorris and Mike Sullivan asserted that there is little interest or concern among citizens about the MBTA's construction for the reestablishment of the Greenbush train and the appointment of a "real" local town ombudsman. They may be right!

Tom Gruber asked 15 questions regarding this project that not one member of the board was able to answer. Felicitously, Mr. Sullivan promised to do research and have the answers to Mr. Gruber's questions shortly.

In the meantime, the board agreed to hear citizens' concerns about the Greenbush project at their next meeting, Tuesday, July 20 at 8 p.m.

It is absolutely essential for you, your families, friends, abutters and neighbors to attend this meeting if you want your views heard. This is your last chance!

Once construction begins after Labor Day it will be too late!

Republican seats are behind Romney's anti-Kerry rhetoric

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

Mitt Romney knows he's lost Massachusetts. Neither he nor anyone else is going to come up with an argument or rhetorical device that will bring the Bay State into the George Bush column Nov. 2.

But that didn't stop the governor from escalating his anti-Kerry campaign, in a fashion that antagonized Democrats sufficiently that they threatened legal action. The trajectory of local politics continued matching the national – as events leading up to the national Democratic convention reached a crescendo with the naming of John Edwards as running mate, Beacon Hill's activity climbed toward a climax as do-or-die time approached for the policy decision making of this legislative session.

But it's well to remember Romney is waging more than one campaign, and not all of them are foregone conclusions.

The presidential race is at the top of the ticket in November; farther down in about 110 legislative districts will come contested races for House and Senate. Romney is thinking not only about his role as chief home-state critic of John Kerry; he knows that the more visibility he receives for his pro-Bush point-making, the more voters are reminded that the Democratic message isn't the only one available this election year.

Everyone knows how Massachusetts will vote for president, but absolutely nobody can accurately call the overall race. Interestingly, the voters Romney wants attention from at the legislative level are the same ones Kerry and Bush are battling for nationwide. Analysts have long known that the race comes down to a tiny proportion of independent-minded voters scattered across 18 states; when these 600,000 or so people make up their minds this fall, that's truly when the race will be determined.

Similarly, the difference between a compelling, impressive, landscape-changing result at the legislative level for Romney, and a typical ho-hum performance, will be his ability to capture the attention of independents in selected districts from Berkshire to Barnstable. He's got to convince them that just as they voted for him instead of Shannon O'Brien in 2002, now enough is at stake in the Legislature that they should turn out to vote for the Republican even though the state is locked up for Kerry at the presidential level.

So his Edwards-bashing – which brought an instant threat of an ethics complaint from the Democrats, because he staged it in the State House – was about more (or less) than the presidential race; it was about his efforts to shape his own state's future. So will all his appearances as the Democratic convention descends upon the Hub.

This is not to pretend that the analogy is perfect – just to assert that interesting parallels exist. And of course, it should be noted – not for the first time, or last – that Romney has reasonably obvious national ambitions. It is not too far-fetched to assert that come to think of it, he may be waging a winnable presidential campaign after all. Just not the 2004 one.

• Finneran's rainy day plan approved in Con Con — The Constitutional Convention okayed House Speaker Thomas Finneran's proposed amendment that places 1 percent of annual state revenues in a reserve fund for budget crises. The Speaker is said to consider the budget-stability proposal a key element of his permanent legacy. A three-fifths vote would be needed to transfer money from the fund; it's a majority vote now. An amendment requiring lawmakers to institute universal health insurance was put off; abolition of the centuries-old Governor's Council was rejected by a lopsided vote.

• Taser bill hits governor's desk after boston shootings — As investigations continued into two recent fatal shootings of suspects by Boston police, a bill that might prevent such fatalities landed on the governor's desk. The House and Senate gave unanimous approval to a measure permitting the use of stun guns by police. The devices immobilize suspects with 100,000 volts, and proponents say they're a better alternative to bullets in many instances. But Boston Police Commission Kathleen O'Toole questioned whether the city could afford the devices, which cost about $700 each.

• Ardith's last stand forces administration's hand — It may not give rise to any stirring ballad, but over the long holiday weekend and into the first part of last week, Beacon Hill's attention was captured by the saga of a middle manager who refused to let go of her job when the Romney administration said it was coming to an end. Ardith Wieworka, head of the Office of Child Care Services, refused to relinquish her job when she was told she would be reassigned. Human Services Secretary Ronald Preston said he was merely carrying out a restructuring ordered by the Legislature. Some children's advocates said Wieworka's done a good job and this is an example of poor stewardship of the state's human-needs infrastructure by the administration. Wieworka was fired, and the case took a twist when she suggested publicly that she was removed because she's a lesbian; Gov. Romney said he didn't know her sexual orientation until she raised the issue.

• Responders say elders threatened by new regulations — Professional Firefighters of Massachusetts and other "first responders" testified at a hearing that elders may be at risk because of new Department of Public Health regulations that went into effect May 25. The rules allow nursing homes to contract with private companies to respond to medical emergencies even though a local public safety station may be closer than the private responder. The rules could become permanent after the Public Health Council meets Aug. 4, but the firefighters warned the rules ought to be amended or reversed. Representatives of the ambulance industry said the calls to the private firms are a cost-saving option, not a mandate. "That's all we're talking about here — that we don't have to send fire trucks to nursing homes," said Brian Connor, president of the Massachusetts Ambulance Association.

• Nipmucs plan to appeal denial of tribal status — Representatives of the Indian clan said the US Bureau of Indian Affairs acted arbitrarily and misinterpreted the facts when it rejected an application by the Central Massachusetts group for formal recognition. The Nipmucs may turn to the federal courts next, leaders said at a Grand Staircase press conference.

• First day of smoking ban brings complaints, praise — The official start of the statewide workplace smoking ban Monday brought the expected grumbling from the smoking community, but health advocates said they expect to see a significant drop in the smoking rate as a result.

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for more than 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on two roll calls and local senators' votes on three roll calls from the week of July 5-9.

ABOLISH GOVERNOR'S COUNCIL (S 1984)

The House and Senate sitting as a Constitutional Convention 43-149, rejected a proposed constitutional amendment abolishing the Governor's Council. This elected eight-member body screens and votes on the confirmation of the governor's judicial appointments and votes on requests for pardons and commutations of sentences.

Amendment supporters said the council is an archaic institution that costs $400,000 annually and noted that 48 other states do not have a Governor's Council. They argued that the Senate would take over the job of confirmation of judges and the House and Senate would handle the pardons and commutations. Some argued that they voted for the amendment in order to simply put it on the ballot for the voters to decide. Amendment opponents said the council is a useful, elected institution that has a long and distinguished history as a voice for the people. They argued that abolishing the council would take away power from the voters and politicize the process of confirmation of judges by placing it in the hands of the Legislature. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment abolishing the council. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment).

MANDATE RAINY DAY FUND (H 4691)

The House and Senate sitting as a Constitutional Convention 181-12, approved a proposed constitutional amendment requiring that annual deposits equal to a least one percent of that year's state tax revenues be made to the state's rainy day fund. The proposal also requires a three-fifths vote of the House and Senate in order to spend money from the fund and prohibits more than 50 percent of the fund from being spent in any one year. Another provision exempts the mandatory deposit in a year in which state tax revenue does not increase and in the following year. Amendment supporters said this requirement is a fiscally responsible one designed to constitutionally ensure that the state build up a reserve fund to help it through difficult economic times. They noted that the Legislature's voluntary contributions to the rainy day fund helped the state get through the recent economic downturn and argued that building up the fund should be mandated in the constitution. Amendment opponents said the idea is a good one but objected to the restriction prohibiting more than 50 percent of the fund from being spent in any one year. They argued that if that limitation had been in effect during the past two years, the state would have had to make more cuts in programs or raise taxes. They also objected to the three-fifths vote requirement to spend the money and argued that a majority vote should be sufficient. This proposed constitutional amendment would also have to be approved by the 2005-2006 Legislature in order to go on the 2006 ballot for voter consideration. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment. A "Nay" vote is against it).

UNSAFE AND DANGEROUS BUILDINGS (H 972)

Senate 35-0, gave near final approval to a House-approved bill requiring an owner of an unused, uninhabited or abandoned building that is determined to be unsafe in the event of a fire, to file a floor plan of the building with the local fire and police departments. Supporters said this common sense-bill designed to protect our brave firefighters has been filed for several years and has yet to be approved and signed into law. They argued that if this law was in effect in December 1999, the six firefighters who perished in the Worcester blaze might still be alive. One senator voted against the bill but his vote was "paired" under a Senate voting system and is not reflected in the vote total. He offered no arguments against the bill. Only final Senate approval is necessary prior to the measure going to Gov. Romney. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill. A "Nay" vote is against the bill).

ALSO UP ON BEACON HILL

FALSE EMERGENCY CALLS (H 1636)- The House gave initial approval to a bill imposing up to a 2.5 year-prison sentence and/or $10,000 fine on anyone who knowingly makes a false call about an alleged emergency situation that threatens the life or safety of persons.

VETERANS' DIPLOMA (H 2399)- The House gave initial approval to a proposal allowing local communities to award diplomas to honorably discharged World War II or Korean War veterans who left the local high school, prior to graduation, in order to serve in the military.

SMALL CLAIMS COURT (H 3000)- The House gave initial approval to a proposal raising from $2000 to $5000 the maximum amount for which a person can bring suit in small claims court.

STATE COLORS (H 2694)- The House gave initial approval to a measure designating blue, green and cranberry as the state's official colors.

STUN GUNS (H 3400)- The House and Senate gave final approval to and sent to Gov. Romney a bill allowing police officers and special prison reactive teams, following proper training, to use stun guns also known as Tasers.

Cohasset Diesel puts veggie-powered bus back on the road

By Matthew J. Gill
MGILL@CNC.COM

After traveling more than 2,000 miles from Texas to Scituate, the cross-country summer plans of a group of six college students came to a screeching halt last month when the vegetable oil powered school bus they were driving broke down in town, marooning them on the South Shore.

On Tuesday evening, however, three members of the group — Christo Corsaut, Eric Meixner, and Danielle Stinson who's mother lives in Scituate — picked up the vehicle at Cohasset Diesel and Gas where it was repaired, and plan to hit the road, heading west sometime this week.

The environmentally conscious group — Corsaut, Meixner and Stinson, along with bus-mates Minerva Perez and the brother-sister contingent of Sean and Whitney Sullivan — set out from Corpus Christi, Texas May 28 in their converted school bus bound for Missouri and the headquarters of www.greasal. com. While there, the company added a fuel filtration system to their bus which allows them to now power the vehicle by using used vegetable oil, which they've been provided at no charge by a number of fast food restaurants they've come across in their travels.

The group then headed east across the country, all the way to Scituate, to pay a visit to Stinson's mother who lives on Ridge Hill Road.

Their stay in the Bay State was unexpectedly extended, however, when the engine of the 32-foot-long vehicle failed.

Although the group originally thought the bus troubles stemmed from its head gasket, Stinson said on Tuesday that the entire engine had to be rebuilt.

A mechanic at Cohasset Diesel and Gas said the o-rings of the engine, which had been previously re-built before the group purchased it, had not been sealed properly in that earlier fix, and allowed the bus's water and oil to mix.

A psychology major at Texas A&M, Danielle said the breakdown of the bus has been frustrating, but she's learned from it as well.

"It was my first real experience owning a vehicle," she said. "I learned a lot about the responsibilities [that come with it.]"

Danielle described the group's unintended stay in Scituate as "kind of slow," but added that many in town contacted them with offers to help.

When locals got wind of the group's engine woes at the end of June, Danielle said a number of people called her, some local mechanics offered their advice, and one man sent the group $25 because years ago his own father had tried a similar driving experiment with alternative fuels.

While the bus was being repaired, Stinson, Corsaut and Meixner traveled to New York, Maryland and Maine to visit some of their friends and enjoy some vacationing via car, while Perez and the Sullivan siblings headed back to Missouri where they've been working for www.greasel.com.

Stinson, Corsaut and Meixner will now drive the bus back to Missouri, and Greasel, where they plan to join up with their friends, and work for the alternative-fuels company for the remainder of the summer.

A 'Stella' performance

Former SHS hurler provides highlight in tough luck season for Post 118ers

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

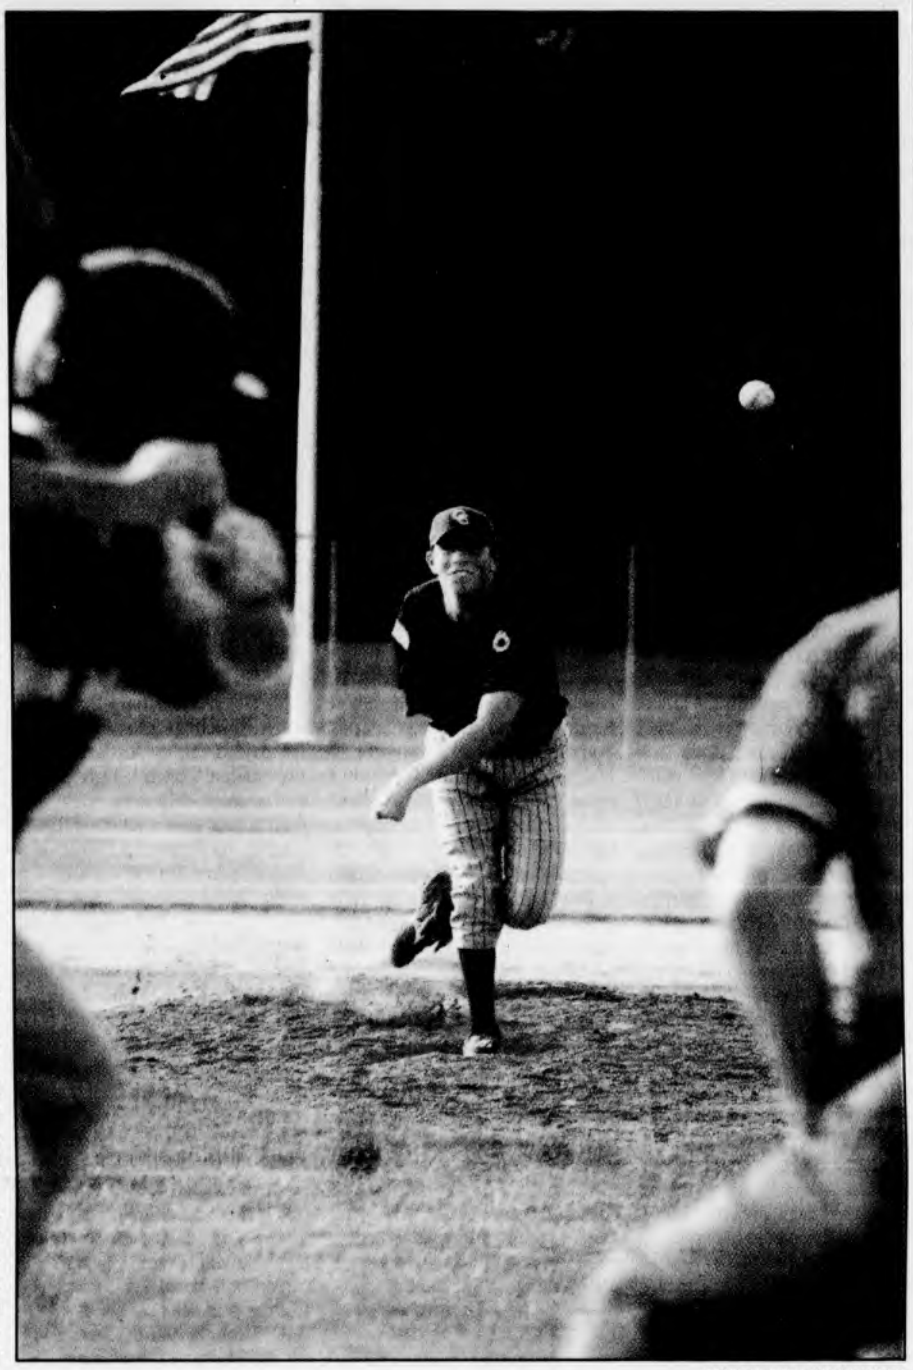
Life hasn't always been kind to Brandon Stella.

The recent Scituate High graduate had hoped to make a start on the mound for his Scituate High team this spring, but it never worked out. The Sailors were in a fight for a league title and postseason seedings, so the coach was forced to ride his strongest arms right to the end. Thus, the lefty hurler never got his shot.

Of course, this disappointment paled by a long shot to many of the trials and tribulations Brandon has been forced to endure during his 19 years of life. The harshest blow was dealt before he was even born, as his mother Susan was involved in a car accident while she was carrying him and the injuries she suffered actually caused her unborn baby to suffer a stroke.

The trauma left the right side of Brandon's body partially paralyzed, and doctors initially told his parents he might never walk. Today, Brandon walks with only a slight limp. His right arm and hand were impacted a bit more, however, to the point anyway where working a baseball glove was never a possibility.

As so often happens in cases such as these, though, the indomitable human spirit found a way. One of the ways Brandon compensated for having only one fully functional arm and hand was to become a very accomplished thrower. As far back as parents Edward and Susan can recall, Brandon loved throwing things and his accuracy became quite uncanny by anyone's measure.



It seemed only natural when this youngster with an innate bent toward athletics anyway gravitated toward the pitcher's mound. He became quite an accomplished pitcher at the Little League level and beyond. When not toeing the rubber, he played a lot of outfield and even some infield. He also messed around in baseball and football at the youth ranks.

But pitching was, and still is his first love. Brandon had a role model in former Major League hurler Jim Abbott, who actually had no right hand at all. Brandon adopted Abbott's way of pinning his lefthanded glove to his chest with his right hand during delivery and then quickly slipping his left hand into the glove before the ball reached the plate.

"I've read a lot of books about him," said Stella, who can actually pick things up and hold them with his right hand, but has a limited range of motion. "He was very inspirational to me. I was real curious about him."

Brandon made the Scituate High freshman baseball team and then the JV squad the following year. As a junior, he pitched approximately 30 innings for the JV team, averaging around a strikeout per inning. He was on the Patriot

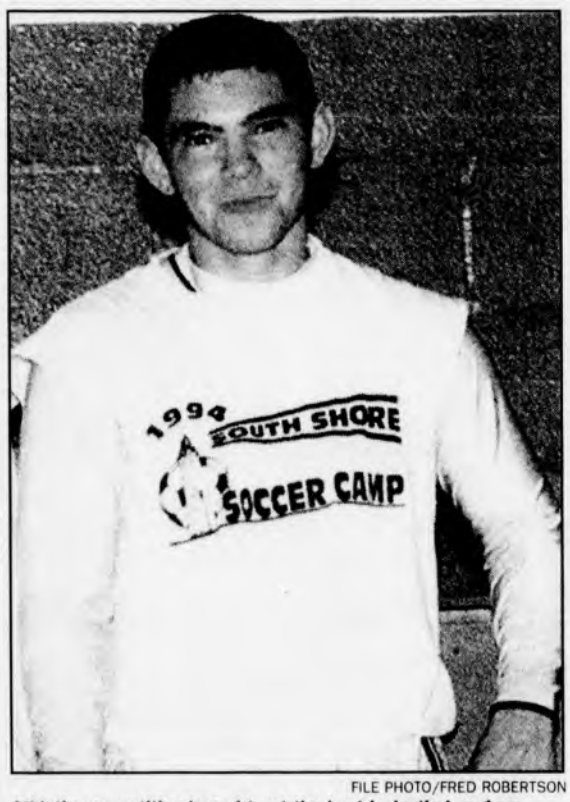
Final Four comes to Cohasset

By Melissa Clark
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

U16 booters advance to Mass. Tournament of Champions finals

If you see some boys in town wearing "FINAL FOUR" shirts, don't assume it has anything to do with NCAA basketball.

The Cohasset boys u16 soccer team qualified, this past weekend, for the final four in the state soccer tournament. This raised Cohasset's tally of teams going to the state tourney to a record setting high of four.



The U16 Boys squad traveled to UMass Amherst to play against the state wide champions of all U16 Div 2 teams.

The team was undefeated in the regular season, 10-0, with only three goals against thanks in large part to the sensational defensive work of team MVP Prescott Busk in goal and Nils Sceery and Sam McDonald in front of him. These players denied many skilled players a goal by their attitude, skill and hard work.

The goals 'for' were scored by a wide distribution of players during the season. Aidan Buick led the offense with skillful footwork and a new found speed and Trevor Brady secured the midfield with his speed and determination.

Expectations were moderate for the team. The players knew the competition would be a very high standard of soccer and 2004

In Memoriam, Johnny Bravo

The morning of Saturday, July 10 was a gift – warm, sunny, with a soft northwest breeze to cut the humidity. The packed, standing-room-only crowd at the Second Congregational Church was reminded – as if they needed to be – of a second gift, the 21 years of Justin Scott Langham's life and the times each had shared with him.

For a few of us, those memories drifted back to the spring of 2001, Justin's senior year at Cohasset High School, the season he was nicknamed after the cartoon superhero – and in some sense became – Johnny Bravo. Justin was finishing his high-school career as a three-sport athlete. He'd excelled at wrestling, where his small stature, light weight and remarkable strength made him nearly invincible, and at football, where his physical stature was a constant challenge. In both sports, he'd been made captain as senior. But, as a junior, he'd suffered

Mariner All-Scholastic Baseball team

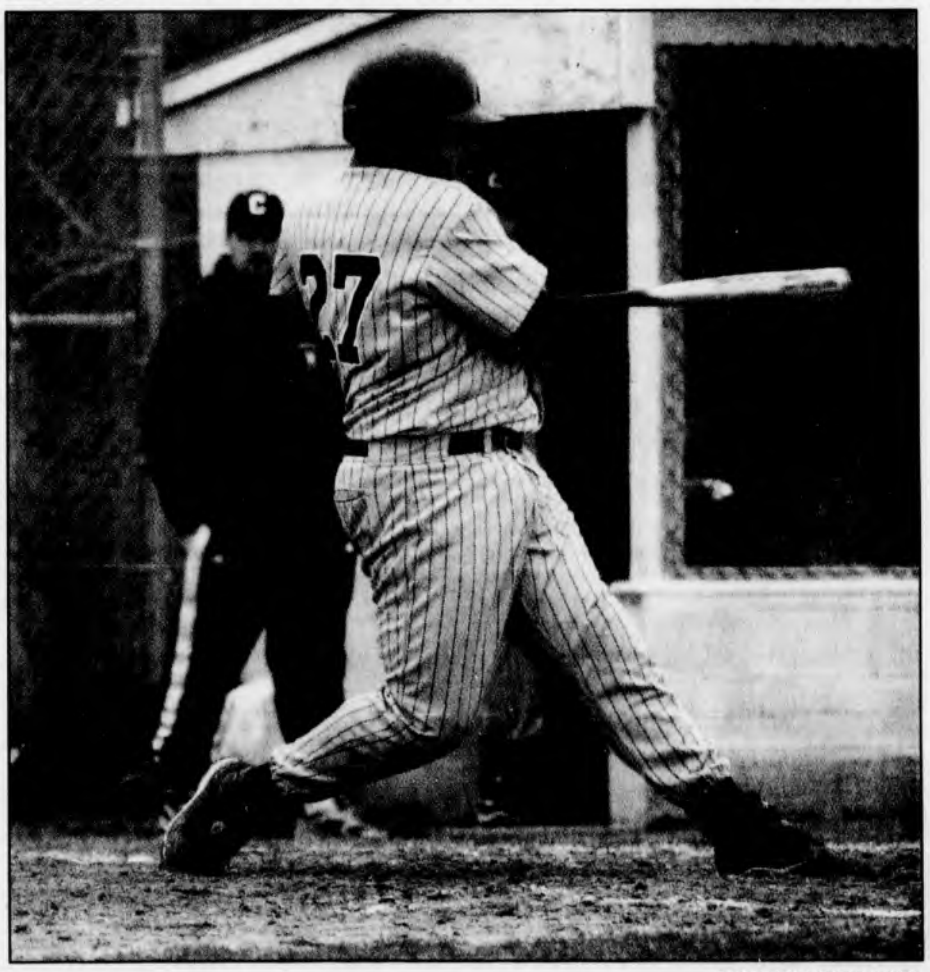
Cohasset's Blanco named among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Several of the young men you see listed below as "Honorable Mentions" received serious consideration for All-Scholastic acknowledgement, among them NHS junior Brian White, who finished 5-2 with an ERA of 2.63. When he wasn't on the mound, he started at second base and hit a solid .333.

In the end, though, we limited ourselves to a team of just 18, and, after consulting with area coaches, we do feel secure that we chose the top baseball players in Marinerland for this honor.

Louis Blanco- Junior
Catcher- Cohasset



Louis Blanco

Enjoyed a breakout year both offensively and defensively...lone member of CHS team named to SSL all-star team...hit team best .436 (24-for-55)...METCO student who plays baseball year round through Boston Broncos program...Dorchester resident had team best seven extra base hits (four doubles, three triples) and 15 RBI...in 55 at bats this season, he struck out just once, an amazing stat for any player, but particularly so for a cleanup hitter...walked just twice...has remarkable hand eye coordination and started to really drive the ball this year...a varsity regular since his freshman year, and a full time starter the last two seasons...worked hard on his defensive skills in the off season and it showed this spring... good student...played AAU baseball through the U16 level...hopes to play college baseball and has set his sights on a few Florida schools...enjoys fishing...Cohasset coach Al Gallotta: "It was so great to see Louis start to realize a lot of his potential this season. About six or seven games into this season, it just all seemed to start clicking for Louis. He came in with a lot of determination and a great attitude this season. He'd always been primarily a singles hitter, but he started really hitting the ball with authority over the second half of the season."

CJ Hillyer - Senior (Capt.)
Pitcher/First base - Abington

Hampered by a shoulder injury during each of the last two seasons, you wouldn't know it by the numbers the lefty Hillyer was still able to put up...A four-year South Shore League All-star, Hillyer led the team in hitting with a .450 average smashing three homers, three triples, and seven doubles this season, helping the Green Wave (15-10) reach the Div. 3 South Sectional finals...His 35 RBI also led the team...Burst onto the scene as a pitcher, but spent the bulk of the last two seasons playing a very solid first base...After undergoing shoulder surgery this season, Hillyer returned to pitch big in the postseason, downing Chatham in the quarters before no-hitting Medway with 10 strikeouts and no walks in his 105 pitch outing in the South semis…Was voted an Eastern Mass. All-star and went 2-for-3 in the game to make the All-State team…He also was named co-MVP of the SSL…Has played for the now defunct Abington Legion, but is a member of the Rockland Cardinals Cranberry League team this summer…A three-time All-Scholastic, Hillyer will continue his baseball career at Holy Cross next fall. Abington coach Steve Perakslis: "Versus Chatham, C.J. showed tremendous guts. He pitched three stellar innings and the rest he did on nothing but guts. His stamina and endurance was not there right yet, but his experience kept batters off-balance for much of the game."

Steve Golbranson - Sophomore
Pitcher - Abington

With their No. 1 starter out with a bum shoulder, Golbranson was given a shot and showed he was an ace in the hole…The lefty sophomore went 8-3 with a 1.44 ERA in his first varsity season…He was instrumental in the Green Wave's (15-10) run to the Div. 3 South finals, striking out 71 batters in 61 innings this season…He also picked off three base runners with his trademark move to first…A South Shore League All-star, Golbranson tossed a two-hit shutout in the team's quarterfinal victory at Nantucket…Also plays football and basketball at AHS…He will return to be the full-time ace next spring. Abington coach Steve Perakslis: "Steve pretty much saved the season. As a sophomore, we were not even counting on him. He was everything you could ask for in a player and he was lights out."

Brian Libby - Senior (Capt.)
Shortstop - Abington

As one of the more productive hitters on the Green Wave team, Libby averaged .417 this season…The anchor of the infield at shortstop, Libby provided stellar defense for Abington (15-10)…A speedster on the base path, Libby led the team in stolen bases with 15, helping his team reach the Div. 3 South Sectional semifinals…His three-run triple broke open a close mid-season game against Rockland, and almost left the stadium…He was also key in the team's 8-1 lashing of Medway in the South semis, smashing a bases-loaded two-run double in the fifth inning…Also saw time on the mound and had a solid showing as the Green Wave's No. 2 starter, going 2-2 with a 2.21 ERA…His biggest win came against previously unbeaten Norwell, holding the Clippers to just four hits while striking out 13 in a 3-2 victory…A South Shore League All-star this season, Libby plans to attend college in the fall. Abington coach Steve Perakslis: "(The Norwell game) was the best game we played all year. They are a very good hitting team and Brian did a tremendous job neutralizing their offense."

Greg Thornton - Junior
Centerfield - Norwell

The spark plug for South Shore League champion Clippers' offense…speedy centerfielder hit a team best .447 this season and was also tops in runs scored and stolen bases (11-for-12)…had a remarkable stretch of 10 games in which he got on base to leadoff the game and then came around to score…an excellent defensive centerfielder who combined very good anticipation and instincts with superior speed…also has a very strong and accurate throwing arm…two year varsity starter in centerfield and leadoff hitter…also a standout tailback for the NHS football team and has been named a captain for next year's team… played basketball his first two years at NHS, but gave that up in order to concentrate more fully on his favorite two sports…Honor Roll student…enjoys surfing…hopes to play college football or baseball…Norwell coach Tom Jacobs: "Greg made us go and got us off on the right foot so many times. He had a lot to do with our number two hitter (Rob Weber) being our leader in RBI. And he was our general in the outfield too. He's just a good all around baseball player."

Dave Liffers - Junior
Pitcher - Norwell

The South Shore League's most dominant pitcher, finishing with a 9-1 record and 1.54 ERA to lead the surprising Clippers to a league title and a 16-4 overall record (11-1 in league)…was named MVP of the SSL and an Eastern Mass All-Star…hard throwing 5-foot-10, 175 pound righty had 85 strikeouts in 65 innings of work…had 13 strikeouts and allowed no earned runs in first round state tourney win over Provincetown, and then came back on two days rest to throw 3-1/3 innings of scoreless relief in tough 7-6 semifinals loss to Cardinal Spellman…allowed no earned runs in complete game win over Patriot League champion Scituate… Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic…batted .276…has played for Hanover Post 149 Legion baseball team the last two years… plays fall baseball in the Hit Dog league…played basketball at NHS through his sophomore year…coaches Little League baseball in Norwell…also coaches and referees youth basketball in town…good student…hopes to play college baseball and major in journalism…recently took part in open tryouts held in area by the San Diego Padres…would like to go to a college down south… Norwell coach Tom Jacobs: "Dave really took it to another level this year. He was our horse. He throws a hard fastball, and a slider, curve and change (up) for strikes. He hits his spots."

Rob Weber - Senior (Capt.)
Shortstop - Norwell

This four year varsity starter earns his second Mariner All-Scholastic selection in as many sports seasons…made the switch from outfield and played a very solid shortstop for the Clippers the last two years…made both the routine plays and the spectacular ones in the field… batted a robust .369 and led the team in RBI (20) out of the second spot in the batting order… South Shore League All-Star…also a Mariner All-Scholastic in hockey, and was team MVP of NHS skaters this winter as a defenseman, as well as a four year starter…was team captain in both baseball and hockey…Honor Roll student… enjoys dirt biking and fishing…little brother of former Mariner All-Scholastic girls basketball player Jessie Weber, who will begin her senior year this fall at Bryant College, where she's continued her hoops career… will attend Mass Maritime, where he plans to major in Marine Engineering and hopes to play baseball…Norwell coach Tom Jacobs: "I look at the way he stepped in to fill a big need, converting from outfield to shortstop, and that told me a lot. He did whatever the team needed. I don't name captains, because captains emerge, and that's just what Rob did. He emerged as our leader, and his leadership had a lot to do with our success. He also made plays in the field that picked up the entire team, the defense and the pitcher."

Matt Greenberg - Junior
Catcher - Norwell

Greenberg earns his second straight Mariner All-Scholastic selection…was clearly the league's premier defensive catcher and provided a big threat out of the third spot in the lineup…also a two-time South Shore League all-star…after hitting a team best .396 as a sophomore, he was pitched around quite a bit this season (team best 23 walks) and wound up batting .293, but his presence in the order assured that fellow Mariner All-Scholastics Weber and Thornton, as well as fellow SSL All-Stars Ryan Laffin and Rob Napolitano, would see lots of good pitches…named a Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic Honorable Mention for second straight year…has previously played AAU baseball for the South Shore Seadogs and Atlantic Coast Badgers…presently playing for the Hanover Legion baseball team…was a varsity hockey standout as a freshman and sophomore, but now concentrates solely on baseball…a good student…hopes to play college baseball… recently took part in open tryouts held in area by the San Diego Padres…going to a college baseball showcase at Wake Forest later this summer…works at Sports RX, a hitting club in Norwell…plays fall baseball in Hanover…Norwell coach Tom Jacobs: "Matt is a very good hitter, but defense is where he really stands out. He might be the best I've ever seen at this level at blocking balls in the dirt, and he threw the ball extremely well too…As far as hitting goes, he generally hit good pitching very well, and had a lot of big hits."

Jesse Ferraro - Senior (Capt.)
Shortstop - Hanover

As the Hanover team's leadoff hitter, Ferraro always seemed to get himself on base for the Indians…he hit over .400 and also had an excellent on base percentage…a Patriot League all-star…also a talented hockey player at HHS, Ferraro led the team to the semifinals of the Div. 2 South Sectional last winter…He plans to attend college and continue his athletic career. Hanover coach Fran Coyle: "Ferraro has been a rock in the infield. A defensive standout. We could always count on Jesse."

Andy Hillier - Senior (Capt.)
Pitcher - Hanover

One of the Patriot League's better pitchers over the past two seasons, Hillier had another solid year for the Indians…A two-year PL All-star, Hillier guided the young Indians team to an 11-9 overall mark, while going 5-7 in the challenging PL…Was also no slouch at the plate as Hillier led the Patriot League in homeruns with six from the No. 5 spot in the Hanover order this season…Went 3-for-4 with three RBI and two homers in a loss to Duxbury…Also a talented golfer and basketball player at HHS…A two-time All-Scholastic, Hillier is spending his summer playing ball on the Hanover Legion squad…He plans to attend college in the fall. Hanover coach Fran Coyle: "Hillier was just outstanding year-in and year-out. He came through on the mound and at the plate and did outstanding work at first base."

Pete Wilson - Senior (Capt.)
Pitcher/Second base - Marshfield

Was one of the better pitchers in the area boasting a 1.23 ERA while going 5-2 for the Rams this season…Accuracy was one of his better assets as he averaged less than 12 pitches per inning and walked only one batter, but did it intentionally…In 52 innings pitched, Wilson struck out 42 batters…During his five-year career, Wilson walked only three batters, again, one intentionally…Tossed a one-hitter and a two-hitter in the same week…When not pitching, Wilson was one of the better second basemen in the area recording only two errors from the position this year…A two-time Old Colony League All-star, Wilson was also a standout hockey player at MHS…He will play both sports at Franklin Pierce College this fall.

Brien MacIsaac - Senior
Pitcher - Marshfield

Provided one of the better one-two starting punches with Wilson this season…MacIsaac went 6-2 with a near un-hittable 0.71 ERA, guiding the Rams to a 13-7 regular season mark…In 56 innings, the senior struck out 84 batters and allowed only 27 hits…Was named an Old Colony League All-star this season…Cited a 14-strikeout one-hit victory over Plymouth South and 16-strikeout extra-inning two-hit win over Falmouth in the Div. 1 South Sectional as his more memorable performances…Marshfield reached the quarterfinals in the South tourney where they were edged by Brookline, 3-2…Also a talented football player at MHS, MacIsaac was key in the Rams' run to the Div. 1 Super Bowl last fall…He will continue his baseball career at Massasoit Community College next fall.

Brian Schilling - Senior
Pitcher - Weymouth

Despite his team's dire record, Schilling was a diamond in the rough for the Wildcats…In 54 innings, Schilling struck out 75 batters for a 1.49 ERA…Struck out 14 batters in three games this season, including against Newton North, a Div. 1 North semifinalist…Was named a first team Bay State Carey League All-star for his efforts…One of his more memorable performances came in a 3-2 victory over Needham, in which Schilling struck out 14 and allowed just one earned run…Schilling will continue his baseball career at Eastern Connecticut State University next fall.

Nick Barese - Senior
First Base/Pitcher - Braintree

Among the Bay State Conference's top hitters and pitchers…hard throwing lefty led the Wamps in innings pitched and posted a noteworthy ERA of 2.31…struck out 45 batters in his 35 innings of work, utilizing a hard moving fastball, while walking 14…his batting average of .337 was best on his team and third best in the BSC-Carey Division…played a very strong first base defensively when he wasn't on the mound…three year varsity payer…Bay State Conference first team All-Star…was also quarterback of the BHS football team and ran winter track…editor of the school newspaper…Student Representative to Braintree School Committee…Honor Roll student who finished high school with a GPA of 3.2…has played for the Braintree Post 149 Legion baseball team these past three years…will attend St. Anselms this fall, and is leaning toward majoring in history with an eye toward going pre-law…hopes to play college football and baseball…Braintree coach Jim Laneau: "Nick really stepped to the forefront this season. He had an all around excellent season, and showed a lot of improvement both as a hitter and pitcher."

Scott Carroll - Senior
Shortstop - Scituate

The value of this two time Mariner All-Scholastic shortstop was perhaps seen most clearly when he went down with a severe sprained ankle and the team really struggled down the stretch…was hitting close to .500 before the injury, but wound up season with team best .410 average with two home runs… finished second in Patriot League MVP voting…hit .483 as a junior…two time Patriot League all-star…was named an Honorable Mention for Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic…starting shortstop for Cohasset Post 118 baseball team … has played fall baseball in the Hit Dog League the last few years…also played varsity basketball for Scituate High the past two years, filling the sixth man role this past winter for the Sectional semifinalist squad…plays drum in a few bands…National Honors Society member…winner of Bausch and Lomb Science Award…was co-editor this year of Editorial section in the SHS school newspaper…will study Engineering at Union College, where he was recruited to play baseball… Scituate Coach Kevin Greer: "Scott was a rock for us at the plate and in the field. He was with me on varsity for three years. He staked his claim on that shortstop position early on as a junior, and really solidified that spot for us the last few years."

Mark Rennie - Sophomore
Pitcher/first base - Scituate

Sophomore southpaw emerged quickly as the Sailors staff ace, helping to lead them to a Patriot League championship…finished with a 6-2 record and an outstanding ERA of 1.46…unanimously selected by Patriot League coaches to the all-star team…6-foot, 160 pound hurler threw a five-hit complete game in the Sailors 4-1 first round state tourney win over Plymouth South, this despite having suffered a torn ligament in the middle finger of his pitching hand early in the game on a head first slide…pin point control and command of multiple pitches was his key to his success…in early season 5-0 win over Hanover, he never went to three balls on a single hitter…played a very sound defensive first base when not pitching…two-year member of Cohasset Post 118 Legion team, but he has missed this entire season due to the ligament tear… Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic… previously played AAU for Seadogs and Spartans, winning a state championship with the latter program last summer…plays fall baseball in Scituate…also played varsity basketball at SHS this past winter…Honor Roll student… member of the Spanish National Honor Society…enjoys fishing…Scituate coach Kevin Greer: "I felt a little nervous to start the season, handing the ball to a sophomore to start the first game of the season, but he put me at ease pretty quickly. He always gave us a good chance to win, and was a real battler out there. He's thrown in a lot of pressure situations in AAU and legion ball, though, so he's not a typical sophomore."

Justin Flanagan - Senior (Capt.)
Pitcher/Outfield - Hingham

As one of few veterans on the rebuilding Harbormen squad, Flanagan was a leader both on the field and as a captain…Became the ace of the club when No. 1 starter Mark Winter was lost for much of the season…A Patriot League All-star, Flanagan guided Hingham to a 10-10 regular season mark, highlighted by a late-season rally in which the squad won seven of its last nine games down the stretch…When not pitching, Flanagan played a solid outfield for the Harbormen…The senior is spending his summer playing ball with the Hingham Legion Post 120 team, which recently knocked off defending Zone 10 champs Sandwich, 8-1, behind Flanagan's complete-game performance…Also a standout forward on the HHS boys soccer team, Flanagan helped guide the squad to an unbeaten Patriot League title (10-0-2) last fall.

Final Four comes to Cohasset

was as enjoyable as always with competitive and sportsmanship play. Sportsmanship is a priority in playing the game to the league and this same team won the tournament's award for best sportsmanship in 2002. The organization monitors fans during the tournament also, so the parents had a hand in that award.

Friday saw the team lose, 4-2, to a physically talented Georgetown team (who later went on to beat a talented Weymouth team 3-0 in the semi-finals on Sunday).

The Cohasset fans (parents, brother and sisters) were not disappointed in the team play.

Sadly, the team lost four teammates (Nils Sceery, Chris Oftshun, Nathan Needle and Brent Daily) after Friday's game to the Apalachia Service Project and family obligations. However, we thank their parents for managing to be in Amherst for the Friday's game.

Friday night, parents were distributed as far away as Windsor, Connecticut hotel rooms, with the whole central state being booked up since last year. Sports tournaments bring together the players and their families in a way not experienced during the regular season. Lots of laughs and getting together aside from the fan huddle on the sidelines are all part of the fun. Meeting for dinner – or breakfast – kids watching movies in a parents room, swimming in the hotel pool or bowling – are all part of the MTOC experience.

Saturday, the other two regular games were scheduled. A gray, rainy early morning game saw Cohasset win 3-0 to a Western/Central Mass team called JBO. Heavy rain with episodic drizzle saw the team pass and tackle with determination.

Missing their teammates, everyone seemed to step up their game. Later in the day, it dried out somewhat. With still sopping wet cleats, the Cohasset U 16 Boys went on to defeat Douglas, the Central Mass team champions, 4-0.

The success advanced the team to the state semi-finals as the wild card. Then it was frantic phone calling to get hotel rooms for everyone while Coach Jeff Donze took care of dinner for the team and parents. A high school friend of his owned a small restaurant/bar in North Amherst (The Harp) and the whole team and parents headed off to a buffet out on the deck as the sun set on the hills. Meatballs and or Mussels and more hit the spot

Coach David Buick presented the team with their Conference Trophies and pins. A Cohasset Jersey was mounted on the wall, taking its place with other successful team jerseys. The U 16s were going to play another day.

Sunday morning brought bright sunshine and sunscreen on the sidelines. The winning Leominster team (Nashoba Valley League) were on their toes, but an early goal by Aidan along with their 'no-let down' attitude kept the score 1-0 for most of the game. The competition was intense – on the field and felt by the fans from both teams.

Worth noting, though, was the cordial chat between the parents, whether it was concern for a 'downed' player or joking about how exhausted fans were watching when it was the players in the heat running for the 40 minute halves. This exemplifies the tone of youth sports that the Mass Youth League seeks to promote.

A penalty kick for Leominster tied it up with 10 minutes to go and then it was OT – 15 minutes a side – where it stayed tied despite some close opportunities for Cohasset.

Penalty Kicks were to decide the game and who played in the State Final game later in the day. After a regulation 5 PKs where it was tied – great saves by Prescott and solid striking by Aidan, Mike and Prescott – the PK battle continued. Leominster prevailed.

The Cohasset Boys U 16 had made it to the semi-finals, though, and did their town soccer program proud with their play, their sportsmanship and their general 'we had fun' attitude. The fans appreciated it all.

What a season – state final four – who would have thought back in March/April . Some parents suggested we book in now for next year. This was great!

The final game was played by Georgetown and Leominster, with Leominster winning 1-0.

a serious knee injury on the gridiron, and missed both the winter and spring seasons as a result. For his third sport, lacrosse, this was a significant setback.

As a sophomore on a team that finished under .500, Justin had been an energetic, if somewhat unskilled, midfielder. The next season, without him, the Skippers again missed the state lax tournament. The old coach left; a new coach – Kevin Orcutt – arrived. Prospects didn't seem particularly good, especially on defense, where only one starter was coming back. Justin – who'd been playing indoors all the previous winter – decided he'd switch to longpole, and try to shore that position up.

To be a lacrosse player the last two weeks of March, when the season starts, is to be cold, wet, uncomfortable, sore and tired – all at once. In the spring of 2001, despite a knee brace large enough for Shaquille O'Neill, Justin grinned and smiled through gray day after gray day. "Want to know how to run that drill?" coach Orcutt would ask rhetorically, "check out Johnny Bravo."

In the first week of April, Orcutt made an unusual decision. He named Justin as captain. "Don't get me wrong," the coach said. "We've got three excellent captains. But everyone – even the seniors – watches Johnny Bravo to see how things are done."

Except for his nine days of community service in Appalachia, Justin started every game, and played for as long and as hard as his damaged leg would allow. Nine games into the season, the Skippers had clinched a berth in the tournament with an 8-1 record; Justin had yet to cover an opponent he matched up with in size. In fact, he led the team in penalties, trying to compensate. But his will to win, his mental toughness overwhelmed them.

There's a photo from that season that I can picture today – an opposing player lying sprawled on the turf, Justin hurdling over the body, cradling the ball, looking downfield, never looking back. The Skippers carried their success into the playoffs, knocking off – in succession – Ashland, Catholic Memorial, and defending state champ Milton. Then, on a hot, muggy day in Ipswich at the state semi-finals, it appeared the streak was ending. Down six goals with eight minutes left, Cohasset scored four in a row to pull within two.But Ipswich won the face-off, and could run out the clock. Justin wouldn't let that happen. He somehow knocked the ball loose, and got it to classmate Lane Forrer. Cohasset scored with 49 seconds left, and again with 32 ticks on the clock, then won in the fourth sudden-death overtime. Many feel it's the greatest game in the history of the Cohasset program. That might be debatable, but no one would argue that it had been the season that turned the program around.

And that's why some of us, when we're asked to reflect on Justin Scott Langham, think back to the spring of 2001, and the season when Johnny Bravo taught all of us a lesson about heart, will and being a role model.

League champion varsity squad this year, and got one relief stint in a game as well as a few late inning chances in the outfield. However, he never got that chance he'd dreamed of to start a varsity game.

"It killed me at times," admitted Stella, whose leading attribute on the mound is control, though he has a fastball in the mid-70s and a hard curve. "I think the hardest thing was that last home game. I always wanted a chance to pitch on the varsity field at Scituate High."

Which brings us to the real point of this story: Brandon did finally get a chance to start on the mound at Scituate High, doing so this past Sunday in the final home game of the year for the Cohasset Post 118 Legion team. Better yet, he did so calling many of the same players teammate he did during the high school season. His Scituate High/Post 118 teammates included Scott Carroll, Jack O'Leary, Terence O'Brien, Mike Barba and Jeff Radding.

Best of all, though, he performed much better than anyone could have reasonably expected. The southpaw scattered eight hits and five walks in six plus inning of work, surrendering five earned runs. He even made two nice plays on the mound on comebackers, fielding the ball with his glove, and then making a quick transfer to throw to first to get the out.

"Brandon was throwing strikes and keeping the ball down, and, for the most part, we made the plays behind him," said Coach Duggan. "He kept us in the game and gave us a chance to win.

"Brandon has been victimized by some questionable D in the past, but the guys supported him well tonight."

The score was 6-4 when Brandon left the mound in the top of the seventh to a standing ovation from all in attendance, including every player on both benches.

"It was a very moving scene," said Duggan. "A lot of people who'd been behind Brandon were there. It wasn't easy to keep a dry eye."

Shortstop Scott Carroll was thrilled to see his former SHS teammate, fellow class of '04 graduate and current Post 118 mate finally get a chance to toe the rubber to start a game.

"There were a lot of guys here who'd always been behind him," said Carroll, who this week earns his second straight Mariner All-Scholastic selection. "You want to do your best behind him in the field.

"He's always got a smile on his face, and he just loves baseball. He lives and breathes it. This was such a great thing for him, and he pitched a good ball game."

"I felt real good out there," said Stella, who seemed a bit embarrassed by the extra attention. "My fastball was working pretty well and my catcher (Ben Murphy) was telling me my curve was breaking so quick he was having trouble catching it. It felt good to have that kind of performance against a good offensive team."

Indeed, Morrisette scored 15 runs against Post 118 in go round number one this summer.

This may have been Brandon's last chance to pitch formally for his home town team, but Brandon does hope to pitch again competitively. He is all set to attend Curry College this fall and he has had a few discussions with that school's baseball coach.

"I'm hoping to play college baseball," said Brandon, a two-term Honor Roll student as a senior who intends to major in Communication, with an eye cast toward a career in television production— a career course that struck his fancy after he took TV production and public speaking courses at SHS.

Kevin Rennie, who helped out with the Post 118 Legion team this summer, has seen a dramatic improvement in Brandon as a pitcher over the last year, and believes he'll do quite well at the college level.

"Brandon worked extremely hard on his game in the off season, and that really showed to me this season," said Rennie, whose son Mark, a junior-to-be at Scituate High, was staff ace of the Sailors this past season. "His breaking ball was a lot sharper this season and he just threw a heavier ball in general.

"The greatest thing about Brandon is he never got discouraged at all. Of all the kids I've been around in sports, he displayed the best sportsmanship of anyone. He came to the field every day looking to do his work and get ready as if he was going to be in there."

And Rennie believes these attributes will pay off big at the next level, playing for a coach he knows well, Dave Perdios. The former Morrisette Legion star and coach actually coached Mark Rennie last summer in AAU ball with the South Shore Spartans, and the elder Rennie reported that his son took as much from that season as any he's ever had.

"Dave will use Brandon, and get the most out of him," said Kevin Rennie of the Curry head coach. "Dave has more baseball knowledge than any coach I've been around. He made a world of difference for Mark in just one year, and I'm confident he can do similar things with Brandon."

Brandon is working this summer with youngsters as a camp counselor for the Scituate Recreation Department.

"We go to the beach one day, and play basketball or football the next day," reported Brandon. "It's fun. I can do anything they need me to do."

Many, it seems, were already convinced of that.

Morrisette 10, Cohasset 4

Obviously, the highlight of this game, if not the season, for the locals was Stella's mound performance.

The hosts kept it close right up through Stella's departure.

Jeff Ciulla and Caroll opened the home half of the first with singles, and they both eventually came around to score on groundouts by Jack O'Leary and Jeff Radding.

Stella and the 118ers found themselves trailing by a 6-2 score into the bottom of the sixth when they struck for two more. Carroll walked and O'Leary singled with one out and both advanced 90 feet on a throwing error. Joe Duggan plated Carroll with a groundout to third and Radding brought home O'Leary with a base hit, making it a 6-4 game.

Joe Duggan came on in relief of Stella after he walked the first hitter to open the top of the seventh, and all heck broke loose after that, three errors a walk and two hits resulting in four unearned runs and a 10-4 final.

Stella got out of potentially big third inning with the help of an inning ending double play that saw second baseman Mike Barba snare a wicked line drive and flip to shortstop Joe Duggan at second before the baserunner could get back.

Weymouth 9, Cohasset 3

The playoff bound Weymouth squad jumped on O'Leary, who went the distance on the mound, for 11 hits and the visiting Cohasset squad was unable to get much going offensively, save for right fielders Shane Caffrey's 3-for-3 performance at the plate.

Kevin Signorelli scored Cohasset's first run in the second inning, as he led off wit ha triple and raced home on a Nick Infusino grounder.

With the game out of reach, Cohasset was able to plate another pair with two outs in the sixth. Signorelli singled and Ben Murphy followed with a walk. These two came around to score, respectively, on hits by Infusino and Caffrey.

Milton 8, Cohasset 1

The locals played the Zone 6 champions relatively tough on the road, Monday, certainly much tougher than they did six days earlier in a 15-0 setback anyway.

Infusino, a junior to be at Scituate High, pitched five solid innings on the mound against a loaded lineup—a very encouraging performance from a hurler who has two more years of Legion eligibility

Carroll went 2-for-3 and knocked in Cohasset's only run. Xaverian senior-to-be Ben Murphy, who's handled the catching chores quite well in Terence O'Brien's absence the last few games, scored that lone run and reached base in all three at bats (2-for-2 with a walk)

First baseman Jeff Radding came up with a big defensive play and saved a couple of runs when he went up fully outstretched to snag a bullet that appeared ticketed for the right field corner.

"I know it might sound funny to hear, but these last three games have felt closer than the score indicates," said Coach Duggan. "They have had a competitive feel to them.

"And the kids have been great through it all. Even with the losses, we're still having a good time."

Next up

With these losses, the Post 118 team squad fell to 1-16-1 with one game remaining.

The boys were slated to play at West Roxbury on Tuesday, the final day Zone 6 is allowed to play. This game needed to be played, as West Roxbury was battling for the fifth and final playoff spot in Zone 6.

Cheerleading volunteers needed

Hundreds gather to remember Justin Langham

Memorial service was held Saturday

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

There will always be 72 members of the Cohasset High School Class of 2001.

At Saturday's memorial service for one of their own, classmates who turned out by the dozens made it clear Justin Langham is with them now and forever.

The service at the Second Congregational Church didn't focus on Langham's death but on his life and how his kindness, intelligence, humor and friendship positively affected the many who knew him.

"Justin reminds us that life is not measured by lengthwise but by how deeply one has lived," said the Rev. Gary Ritts, pastor of the church in which every pew was filled. The overflow crowd spilled into the aisles while others stood at the back of the sanctuary.

The 20-year-old, who was president of his class, was tragically killed April 26 in Glasgow, Scotland where he was attending college. He was on his way back to his dormitory at 9:30 a.m. when he was hit by a truck and succumbed to his injuries at the scene.

"He was always there when you needed him and he lived every day."
— John Cotter

Over the past 2-1/2 months, the shock of the accident has begun to fade, making way for some humorous remembrances and tears of joy about a young man who knew the true meaning of friendship.

The memorial service, which was held in July when Langham's friends would be home from college, included music, poetry readings, songs recorded by some of Langham's favorite bands, and a heartfelt tribute by three of his buddies.

The young men painted a picture of their bright, fun-loving friend, who could also be serious, but often told them not stress out so much.

Doug O'Brien recalled that was a lot easier for Langham, who considered becoming a journalist.

"He was the brightest kid I've ever known and was a talented writer," said O'Brien, adding while he would be up all night stressing about a paper – Langham would go to bed early, bang out the paper the next morning and still get a better grade.

O'Brien described Langham, whom he visited not long ago in Glasgow, as being content with life.

"We sat in a local pub and Justin talked about his trip home in March and how great it was to see his parents," he recalled.

O'Brien said Langham was "irreplaceable – the best of the best."

"I feel right now he is with us, over our shoulder," he said, adding he still finds himself talking to Langham and laughing with him. "I love you so much Justin, but I know you know that," O'Brien said.

Marc Verrochi said his lack of patience and ADD (Attention Deficit Disorder) makes him an annoying friend. But Verrochi said Langham tolerated his idiosyncrasies, such as incessant phone calls and agreeing to go out to breakfast with him at the spur of the moment on a Saturday morning when their friends were sleeping in.

"Justin didn't even eat breakfast," Verrochi said. "But he would always go that extra step for a friend."

Verrochi recalled fishing with Langham and getting so frustrated when the fish got away. "Justin would tell me 'to just let it go – that it would be OK…'he would say to all of us that everything would be OK."

Verrochi said they were blessed to have had Langham in their lives and they would get through the sorrow with the strength that he gave them.

John Cotter warmly described gatherings in the Langhams' basement on the weekends. He said Langham sent him an email acknowledging how great his parents were for "putting up with you guys all the time."

"He had so much potential and was so full of life," Cotter said. "…He was always there when you needed him and he lived every day."

Cotter recalled how Langham had a vast knowledge of many subjects and could remember everything. However, he drew laughter at the service when he recalled how Langham conveniently "forgot" his (Cotter's) name when the Cohasset police arrested Langham and some others for taking an unauthorized swim after hours at the Cohasset Swim Center over one Fourth of July. Thanks to Langham, Cotter wasn't arrested.

"No one will ever forget you, Justin," Cotter said. "You will be with us the rest of our lives."

Rev. Ritts read a note written by Langham during ASP 2001 (Appalachia Service Project) in West Virginia in which Langham chastised himself for some of the things he'd done and for not having bonded with ASP families in the past. He described the look on the grateful homeowner's face when she saw the new floor his ASP group had installed.

Justin Langham

"I realized the little things don't matter, I've grown up a lot in the past nine days," Langham wrote.

Ritts said Langham knew about opening up and making connections in life.

"On days like this we realize how much people really matter – not places or things," Ritts said. "…May we treat this day as the gift it truly is…a day to be together as friends and to embrace as you never have before.

"Justin, you've helped us do that once again."

Immediately following the service, Langham's parents, Steve and "K" (Kazue) Langham, invited the gathering to a reception at the Red Lion Inn to visit and share more memories.

Groups of college students, all friends of Langham's, hugged outside the church on what was a brilliant summer's day before making the short trek across the common and down South Main Street to the inn.

A Justin Langham Scholarship Fund has been set up at the high school. Donations may be sent to Cohasset High School, 143 Pond St. Also donations can be made to ASP in Langham's memory in care of the Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave.

Memorial planned for Justin Langham

Christine Kelville of Kelville Enterprises said a monument celebrating the life of Justin Langham will be placed in the municipal parking lot in the village once the area is reconstructed as part of the Greenbush project. The monument is a collaborative effort among Kelville Enterprises, the MBTA, Jay Cashman Inc. and the town, she said.

"It will be a beautiful way for Steve, 'K,' Justin's friends and family to pay tribute to his memory," Kelville said.

Mr. Langham, Justin's father, is a vice president at Kelville.

Kelville said she has had the pleasure of knowing the Langhams for five years.

"Although Justin has left us at such a young age, he experienced more happiness, love and friendship than most people do in a lifetime," she said.

Spiritual journey for breast cancer survivors

Dr. Annabelle Wallace, a psychotherapist practicing in Norwell, and Dr. Carol Stanton, Director of Development for Glastonbury Abbey will host a day-long event for breast cancer survivors on Saturday, July 17 from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Glastonbury Abbey Conference Center in Hingham.

The day will include nature walks on the Abbey grounds, group discussion, journaling, yoga and stretching, and time for quiet reflection.

The day will include nature walks on the Abbey grounds, group discussion, journaling, yoga and stretching, and time for quiet reflection. The cost is $100 per person, which includes a healthy breakfast and lunch.

Stanton, herself a breast cancer survivor, said that there are support groups for medical information, exercise, nutrition, family relationships, and other topics faced by breast cancer survivors, but none for the spiritual aspects of dealing with disease. "Cancer has a way of bringing you face to face with the 'big questions' of life," Stanton said. "Why am I here? Why did I get this disease? What kind of a God creates or allows cancer to happen? How am I going to cope? How do I deal with long term effects of disease and treatment? These are questions that call for spiritual answers."

Wallace said that cancer patients typically go through five to seven stages of dealing with loss when confronted with cancer diagnosis and treatment. "They have to deal with loss of their health, even if only for a time," she said. "They deal with the possible loss of body parts, loss of their regular life routine, loss of dreams and hopes for the future. Each person copes in his or her own unique way, but regardless of coping styles, cancer will change each patient, and each family."

Stanton and Wallace suggest that workshop participants have finished at least part of their cancer treatment, and stress that women of all faiths, as well as those with no formal religion, are invited to attend.

For more information, call Dr. Wallace at 781-659-9300.

Perfect pound cake

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE
CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Pound cake derives its name from a 17th century English cake that was made from one pound each of flour, sugar, butter, and eggs. (Another famous "ingredient" cake is the 1-2-3-4 cake, which is made from 1 cup of butter, 2 cups of sugar, 3 cups of flour, and 4 eggs.) In fact, American layer cakes are descendants of this simple combination of ingredients. Although the old one-pound-each formula has long gone out of fashion, modern versions of pound cake are still with us and rightly so given the recipe's appeal and usefulness.

The bad news about pound cake is that a good one is hard to come by. I was looking for a tender, moist crumb with a good rise, a rich cake that is also light, delicate but full-flavored. I also wanted a recipe that was not concocted by an outpatient, some mad science experiment with dire warnings about deviating even minutely from the elaborate instructions. Since I was not going to use baking powder for this recipe (I tested this method and did not like the texture), relying instead on the creaming of butter and sugar to lend lift to the batter, I knew that the temperature of ingredients and proper mixing methods were going to be key.

Having assembled a starting recipe, the first question was which mixing method to use. I could beat together the butter, sugar, and egg yolks, add the flour, and then whip the whites separately, folding them into the batter. This method, one used by James Beard in American Cookery, was okay but the cakes were not rich and moist enough. Next, I tried the obvious method, simply beating the butter and sugar together, adding the eggs one at a time, and then folding in the flour. Having tried this method a number of times, I found that this was a chancy recipe since the batter often appeared "curdled" or separated. After years of making pound cakes I have found that a small amount of attention to the temperature of the ingredients solves this problem.

Cold ingredients will make a lousy cake since they will not whip up properly, forming a cohesive emulsion. On the other hand, the butter should not be at room temperature, at the point that it is very soft, almost melted. The butter should be soft and malleable, but still have some body to it. For those who have an instant read thermometer, simply stick it into the butter. It should read 67 degrees. If you have forgotten to leave the eggs out at room temperature, simply put them in a bowl of hot water for two minutes.

I have two last remedies for a grainy, "curdled-looking" batter. First, assuming that the ingredients were too cold to start off, take a kitchen towel, soak it in very hot water, wring it out, and then place it around the bowl of your standing mixer as it is beating the ingredients. You may have to repeat this step two or three times. Second, be patient. Often by simply beating the batter long enough, the mixture will turn dull and thick, just what you want.

One last suggestion: Do not use a Pyrex loaf pan for this recipe. Since it bakes for over an hour, the bottom or sides can overcook since glass is such a good conductor of heat. A cheap metal pan is just fine but be sure to grease it well.

ALL-PURPOSE POUND CAKE

I make this recipe a lot during the summer since it is the perfect accompaniment to a bowl of fresh fruit served with a splash of cream.

1-2/3 cups cake or all-purpose flour (cake preferred)
1/2 teaspoon salt
2 sticks unsalted butter, softened but still firm
1-1/2 cups sugar
5 large eggs, room temperature
1-1/2 teaspoons vanilla extract
1 teaspoon lemon zest

1. Heat oven to 325 degrees. Grease (with soft butter or vegetable oil spray) and flour a standard metal (not Pyrex) loaf pan, 9 by 5 by 3 inches. Sift together the flour and salt onto a large piece of wax paper.

2. Place the butter in a large metal mixing bowl and beat until smooth, light colored, and creamy. This can be done by hand, about one minute, or in an electric mixer, about 30 seconds. Gradually add the sugar and beat until the butter turns almost white and is very fluffy, about 5 minutes by hand and 3 minutes with an electric mixer.

3. Add the whole eggs, one egg at a time, beating for 20 seconds after each addition. The mixture should be dull and smooth after beating each egg. If the batter appears grainy or separated, the butter or eggs may have been too cold. In this case, warm the outside of the bowl with a kitchen towel soaked in hot water and then wrung out. Continue beating until the mixture appears dull and thick. Add the vanilla and lemon zest and beat 10 seconds or until mixture is thick.

4. Add the flour in three equal parts, folding it into the mixture with a large rubber spatula until the batter is well mixed. Scrape up from the bottom of the bowl frequently.

5. Pour batter into prepared pan and bake for 1 hour and 10 minutes. The top should be split and nicely browned and a cake tester or straw inserted into the center should come out clean. If not, continue baking and check every 5 minutes. When done, empty cake upside down onto one covered hand (use two pot holders) and then place the cake right side up onto the cooling rack. Cool at least 1 hour before slicing and serving.

Rally for a Cure event at golf club

Rally For A Cure, the world's largest grassroots women's golf program, has selected Cohasset Golf Club as an official site for its annual breast cancer awareness and early detection campaign that supports the mission of the Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Foundation. In 2003, Rally For A Cure registered more than 2,900 golf clubs across the country and gained the participation of 150,000 plus women golfers to raise more than $3.4 million for the crusade against breast cancer.

This year, more than 75 women golfers from the South Shore area are expected to participate in this local fundraising event. The Rally for A Cure dates for the Cohasset Golf Club are Tuesday, July 27 for the women's 18-hole group and Wednesday, July 28 for the women's 9-hole group.

Breast cancer is the leading cause of death for women ages 35-54, and accounts for more than 75 percent of all cancer deaths in women 55 and older. Presented by Golf for Women Magazine, Rally For A Cure has raised more than $12 million dollars for important breast cancer research since its founding in 1996.

Daylilies along July's sunny borders

GREEN THUMBS UP

SUZANNE MAHLER

The star performers of the July sunny borders are surely the daylilies (Hemerocallis). Few perennials rival daylilies for their ease of culture and their diversity of bloom size, color, and form. Nearly all colors are represented in the modern daylily with the exception of true blue and pure white. Sunny yellows, luscious peaches and melons, fiery oranges and reds, pretty pinks and pastels, and deep velvety purples are just some of the colors currently available. Unusual patterns and blotches in contrasting colors have also been developed resulting in a fascinating assortment and range of possibilities among the thousands of colorful cultivars on the market.

Early, midseason and late-blooming varieties afford gardeners the opportunity to enjoy daylily blossoms from June to frost. Reblooming dwarf cultivars including the bright gold 'Stella de Oro' and the lemon yellow 'Happy Returns' offer repeat bloom on and off during the summer months making them popular candidates for traffic islands and commercial plantings as well as home gardens.

Daylilies originated in China where they were grown in door-side gardens as a source of food, medicine and for an uplifting of the spirits. Their botanical name, Hemerocallis, means 'beauty for a day', and in fact, each individual blossom lasts for only one day but given multiple stems, known as scapes, and dozens of flowers on each scape, their bloom period usually lasts for many weeks. Although these fibrous-rooted perennials are members of the lily family, they should not be confused with the "true" lilies that grow from scaly bulbs. Daylilies are not susceptible to the annoying Asiatic lily-leaf beetle.

Daylilies originated in China where they were grown in door-side gardens as a source of food, medicine and for an uplifting of the spirits.

Flower sizes in daylilies range from the tiny flowers of 2-inch miniatures to the massive blooms of large-flowered cultivars up to 8 or 9 inches across. Foliage and scape height is equally variable with dwarf varieties only 10 to 12 inches tall, suitable for the rock garden or front of the border, to statuesque plants 3 to 4 feet high, ideal for the back of the perennial beds.

Meadows ablaze with 'Tiger Lily', as this species Hemerocallis fulva is often nicknamed, are cheerful sights during the early weeks of July. Grower beware, however, as tiger lily spreads rapidly on long, stoloniferous roots. If grown among newer daylily cultivars, which have a considerably more restrained growth habit, it may invade and overtake its cousins. It should be noted that daylilies cannot change color, but vigorous, chance seedlings or the infiltration of tiger lily may give the appearance that your prize pink daylily has taken on a new tint. Tiger lily may be best left to flourish on its own in naturalistic settings, at some distance away from other daylilies and perennial borders.

Although daylilies are drought tolerant and will bloom with as little as 4 to 6 hours of filtered sunlight, they thrive when provided with copious moisture and full sun. Moisture-retentive, well-drained soils that are rich in compost or manure are ideal. The application of a summer mulch is beneficial. Daylilies can be planted anytime the ground can be worked and can even be transplanted in full bloom. Division every 4 to 6 years will ensure larger flowers and more robust plants. May and early September are the best times to divide and transplant these versatile perennials although I prefer fall division as transplants are more likely to bloom the following season. Spring division may disrupt the bloom cycle. Fertilize during the spring with Plant-O-Ganic 8-8-8 or a similar slow release plant food.

Artist's Way Group to begin on July 27

Local writer Cathy Corcoran will conduct an Artist's Way Creativity Group on Tuesday evenings from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Flow Zone Cafe, 121 Nantasket Ave., Hull. The group is based on principles found in the best-selling book, "The Artist's Way" by Julia Cameron, and will meet eight Tuesdays from July 27 through Sept. 14. Cost is $89. Space is limited.

Corcoran said that the group is open to artists, writers, musicians, gardeners, quilters, or anyone who wants to become more creative. "The Artist's Way is a wonderful way to tap into the creativity we all have inside, and explore different ways of expressing it," she said. "It's great for practicing artists, or for those who have always wanted to be artists, and is especially effective for those going through life transitions."

Corcoran has been a regular columnist and feature writer for The Patriot Ledger for more than 15 years. She hosts Heartbeat, a weekly health program on WATD Radio, Marshfield, and is an independent communications consultant who works with for-profit and non-profit clients to design and implement communications programs. She has facilitated Artist's Way groups in Hingham, Quincy, Duxbury, and Scituate.

Group participants are asked to bring a notebook and a copy of "The Artist's Way" to the first meeting on July 27. The book is available at most bookstores. For reservations, call the Flow Zone at 781-925-5221.

Here and Now, her recently released 10th album — on July 24. "This album has several threads and themes. There is something very satisfying about being able to put something out as a whole, and have it stand together as an artistic statement."

The Yale-educated Carpenter has been making artistic statements since the release of her first album, Hometown Girl, in 1987. In the years since, Carpenter has sold more than 12 million albums, charted a number of hit singles, won five Grammys, and earned two Country Music Association Awards.

"The new album explores everything from loss and grief to renewal. It has songs that I never could have written in my 20s," said Carpenter, 46, by telephone last week from Kentucky. "It is about people seeking a place to belong. It is also about the importance of living life to the fullest."

One of the 12 new songs written by Carpenter for the album, "Elysium" was inspired by the artist's June 2002 marriage to contractor Tim Smith and the couple's subsequent relocation from Washington, DC, to the Blue Ridge Mountains in South Central Virginia.

"The song is about meeting my husband. The very first day I met him, we took a drive. The song starts out, very literally, about the drive through the mountains and coming up at the top of a mountain and looking into the valley. It was the middle of winter, but somehow it was amazingly balmy and everything was still green. It's sort of a song about falling in love with him, and all of a sudden, after looking for a long time, discovering a place that I had wanted to be."

Where Carpenter is now is on an extensive US tour. She was on the road only briefly last summer and last fall played selected dates with fellow songwriters Patty Griffin, Shawn Colvin and Dar Williams. "The reality is that I used to tour whether I had a new album or not," says Carpenter. "Now, the time it takes me to write a new album affects how much time I spend on tour. It took three years to make this album. I work on a large legal pad, there's nothing very enigmatic about it, it just takes time."

With her first new album in three years now out on Columbia Records Nashville, Carpenter is happy to be on tour in support of it. She may have been off the road, more than on in recent years, but she is quick to point out that she does not consider her current efforts to be any kind of a comeback.

"The concept of being back is odd to me. I don't feel like I ever left."

(Mary Chapin Carpenter will perform at the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset Saturday, July 24 at 8 p.m.. For tickets and information, call 617/931-2787 or visit www.themusiccircus.org.

[illegible] was studying [illegible] at Boston University in the early 1970s and I got the [illegible] of Vanzetti in a play," recalled Rothauser by telephone last week. "I had an emotional reaction, like the events had [illegible] I knew then that I needed to know more about the story." [illegible] with help from a National Endowment for the Arts grant, Rothauser shot 20 minutes of footage for a Sacco and Vanzetti film that became part of his Master's thesis. The life, and death, of the two Italian immigrants continued to fascinate Rothauser long after he finished graduate school.

In 1920, Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti were arrested on a Brockton trolley car and subsequently charged with robbery and the double murder of two payroll guards at the old Slater Morrill and Rice & Hutchins shoe factories on Pearl Street in Braintree. It was a time of intense anti-immigrant sentiment and communist paranoia, and Sacco and Vanzetti found themselves in the center of a political firestorm. Immigrants were commonly, and most often unfairly, linked to the terrorist activities of the time. Sacco and Vanzetti were both openly associated with known anarchist Luigi Galleani, who sought the overthrow of the US Government.

Although none of the money stolen during the Braintree robberies was ever found or linked to them, and eyewitnesses told of seeing five individuals escaping the crime scene, Sacco and Vanzetti were the only two ever charged or convicted. There was an unprecedented global outcry in response to the verdict, which many believe was based on coerced testimony, as well as a biased judge and the federal government's admitted tampering. Despite this, Sacco and Vanzetti were executed in 1927.

"Six years ago, I revisited the project, but I found difficulty raising the funds to move forward with a film on the subject," Rothauser says. "Ultimately, the project took the form of a docudrama — and the first American film of the story - told from Vanzetti's point of view. We use the text of letters that Sacco and Vanzetti wrote while in prison and other source material to not only look back at the case, but also to explore the immediate and lasting legal and social questions raised by the trial. There was intense fear and paranoia at the time and the prosecution went so far as to withhold evidence that could have changed the outcome of the case."

On the fiftieth anniversary of their execution, then Massachusetts Governor Michael S. Dukakis publicly proclaimed that Sacco and Vanzetti had not received a fair trial and declared that any stigma or disgrace to their names should be removed. Dukakis declared August 23 to be Sacco and Vanzetti Day in Massachusetts.

(The Diary of Sacco and Vanzetti will be screened for one night only July 22 at 7:30 PM at 38 Cameron Street, North Cambridge, with a reception and discussion to follow. Reservations may be made by calling 617/492-4091.)

UNDIAGNOSED HEARING LOSS

According to a recent analysis of nearly 1,600 research studies, the percentage of Americans over age 65 with hearing loss could approach 40%. Only 25% of elderly patients who could benefit from hearing instruments, however, receive them. While primary care physicians routinely perform eye exams and blood pressure tests, less than 10% screen elderly patients for hearing loss. More than 90% of hearing loss is sensorineural (nerve deafness), which typically results from damage to the hair cells of the cochlea. This type of hearing loss is characterized by the loss of ability to hear high-frequency sounds, as well as difficulty filtering out background noise. While there is no treatment, hearing instruments can greatly improve hearing in these cases.

If you have hesitated about getting a hearing aid because of cosmetic or other concerns, we'd like to tell you about the improved, technologically sophisticated devices that are now available. With instruments adapted to individual specifications for secure fit and hearing, more people are comfortable doing something about their hearing problem. Take that first step toward improved hearing. Arrange a hearing test and evaluation at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth, where our primary mission is to treat your ears to the sound they deserve. PH: 781-337-1144.

P.S. Hearing loss is the third most prevalent chronic health condition among elderly Americans.

School deficit headed for fall special Town Meeting

Gas bill surfaces as fiscal year ends

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

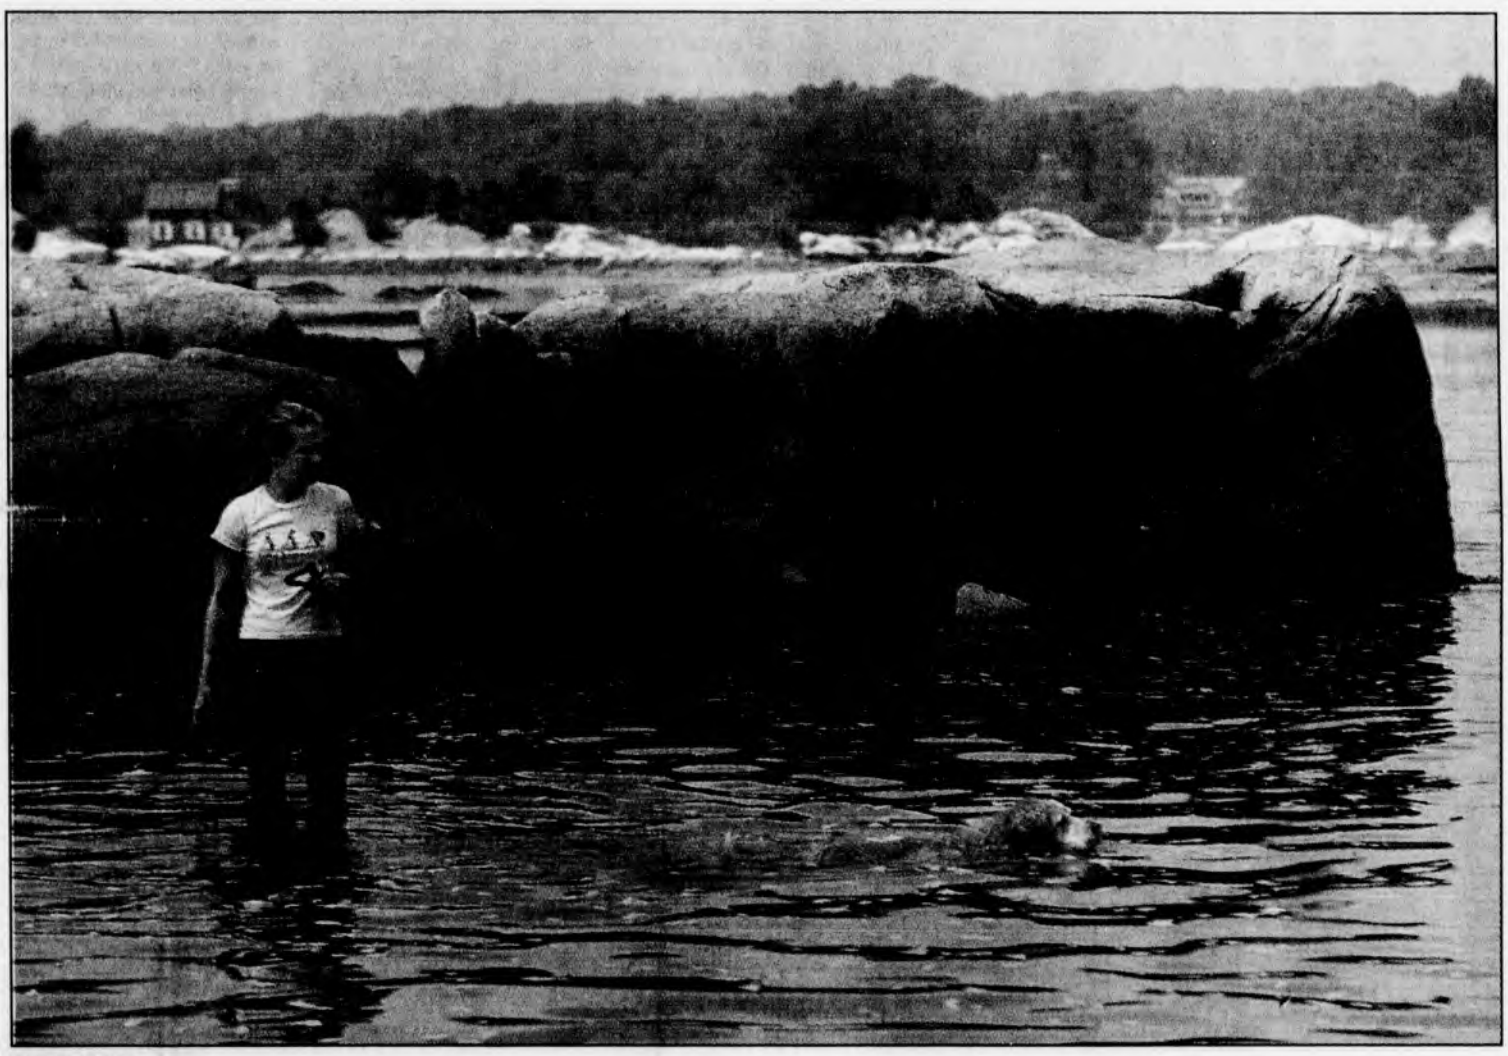
It's not pleasant when unanticipated bills arrive and there's no wiggle room in the budget.

The school committee found that out just as the fiscal year came to a close June 30 when a $90,000 unpaid gas bill surfaced.

The schools also incurred some $65,000 in unbudgeted unemployment insurance costs in fiscal year 2004.

School committee chairman Rick Shea said as the schools began closing out the fiscal year, there were a number of obligations that came in that were more than had been anticipated. While some shortfalls can hopefully be covered within the budget — like a $22,000 electric bill for which $14,000 was budgeted — others cannot.

Shea said the $90,000 Keyspan energy bill came in around the end of April or beginning of May. Shea said the schools only recently began using gas instead of oil to heat the schools, and the estimates given by Keyspan were much lower than what the meter readings actually read. He said upon receiving the bill for the costs incurred, former Supt. Edward Malvey spoke with Keyspan and reached an agreement where the schools would be allowed to defer the bill for a while. Malvey worked out a deal with the company which would allow the schools to pay the bill in installments over a six-month period. "It's a little like novocaine, it doesn't eliminate the pain, it just postpones it," Shea said.



"When it is all said and done, the utility bill is an unpaid bill to the town."
— Michael Buckley, acting town manager

But Town Manager Michael Buckley said the installment plan will not be an option. Under state law, bills incurred in one fiscal year cannot be paid with funds from another. The Keyspan bill is a fiscal year 2004 cost, and the school district had planned on using FY05 funds to pay the bill. FY05 began July 1.

"When it is all said and done, the utility bill is an unpaid bill to the town," said Buckley, adding ,the cost will have to come before voters at the fall special Town Meeting. Although it will take an eight-tenths majority vote at Town Meeting to allocate funds to pay the bill, voters have few options. Buckley said if the voters choose not to approve the funding, Keyspan would, "most likely turn off the gas, or sue the town, or both."

But the Keyspan bill will not be the only cost transferred to the Train topic turns nasty

Abutters want a local ombudsman

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The best reality television series may be playing in Cohasset on Tuesday nights.

With outbursts and confrontations, Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan had to wield the gavel this week when an agenda item discussion on the MBTA ombudsman position got heated, ending in a minor altercation between acting Town Manager Michael Buckley and Peter Pratt of Ripley Road.

Roughly 50 residents, who have outstanding issues with Greenbush, packed into the selectmen's meeting room, in hopes the board would listen to their concerns and replace the current train ombudsman with someone local who could advocate for them. However, some members in the audience took the conversation to the next level; and

Preservation committee ponders two pocket parks

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

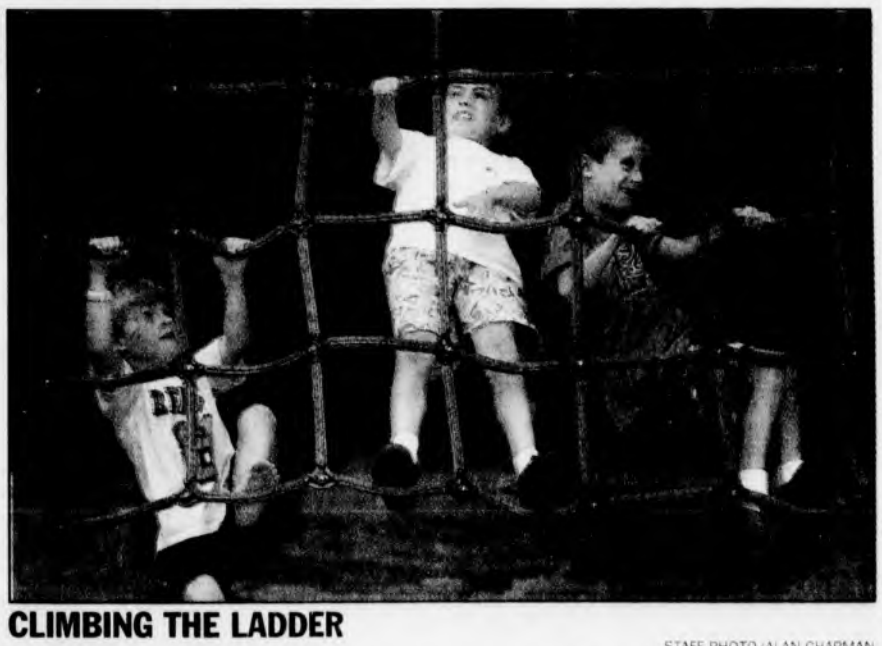
Money from the town's community preservation fund can be used for passive recreation.

And with open space disappearing to development, even small "pocket" parks could be attractive to townspeople.

Two ideas — one to preserve and the other one to create a small park — were given a first pass before the community preservation committee Monday.

The small proposed park on about 1.6 acres at 44 Beach St. was more formally presented to the committee, although the proposal still has a ways to go.

The town using CPC funds to buy the small village park — sandwiched between Tedeschi's and French Memories on South Main Street — was also raised as a possibility as the committee actively looks for ways to fulfill its charge of preserving the community through land and historical preservation and affordable housing.



"It would be a place for folks to stop and sit and observe Little Harbor as they walk up and down Beach Street."
— Todd Marshman, 45 Beach St.

The town adopted the Community Preservation Act in 2001, setting up a fund that derives its money from an annual 1.5 percent surcharge on real estate tax bills and a 100 percent state match from filing fees on mortgages, deeds, homesteads, and the like at the Recorder of Deeds Office. [The level of state match could decrease if more cities and towns adopt the CPC].

The Gormley residence at 44 Beach St. is expected to be sold privately in the late summer or early fall.

Todd Marshman, who lives across the street at 45 Beach St., said he talked with abutters about retaining the property as open space. He said the consensus was it was a nice idea if the existing house — that was built in 1880

Keeping senior citizens on the move

CEA puts out call for volunteers

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Being able to remain in the family home throughout the golden years is the goal of many senior citizens. However, sometimes it is only through the assistance of others that the arrangement remains successful. In light of that, the Cohasset Council on Elder Affairs is working hard to offer programs to help seniors maintain their independent lifestyles, while allowing them to remain at home for as long as possible.

The CEA provides many services including transportation, educational seminars, and the comfort of knowing there is always a friend to offer help when needed. But members of the CEA staff say they are only able to provide those services through the efforts of many generous volunteers, who donate their time to benefit Cohasset seniors.

"We help keep people in their homes," said CEA Volunteer Coordinator Martha Horsefield, by recognizing the needs of senior citizens in town and providing assistance as needed.

For example, Horsefield said one of the most beneficial programs for seniors is the escort shopping program, which allows seniors to do their own grocery shopping, even if they no longer drive. Vans driven by CEA volunteers pick up the seniors and take them to local markets, and will even help carry and put away groceries back at the house.

The escort shopping program allows seniors to do their own grocery shopping, even if they no longer drive.

CEA Outreach Specialist Carol Barrett accompanies the seniors on their trip to the supermarket every week. She, along with a van driver and one additional volunteer, travel up and down the aisles with the seniors, helping each one find every item on their shopping lists. Barrett said for those who are not able to make the trip, the CEA is happy to pick up a shopping list and a check, and will purchase one week's worth of groceries, delivering the items to the house and helping put them away.

Horsefield, who accompanied seniors on their trip to the grocery store one week while Barrett was on vacation, said she saw a tremendous need for strong volunteers who can drive the van and help make sure seniors are helped in and out safely, and can also help carry in the heavy groceries, such as large bottles of laundry detergent or jugs of milk and juice. Horsefield said one client turned to the van driver as she was being dropped off and asked if he would be able to open a few jars for her before he left. For Horsefield, it really brought the point home that there is a need for the services the CEA is providing, and those services are a tremendous help for the seniors who participate in the program.

Barrett said many seniors have lived in their homes for years and their family has all grown up and moved away, which leaves them with limited means of getting around. In addition, seniors will sometimes move to town to be closer to their families, and job transfers or other circumstances cause the family to move away. Whatever the case, without someone to rely on for transportation, some seniors cannot get around, and the CEA helps make that possible.

In addition, Horsefield said many seniors in Cohasset have too many assets to qualify for financial assistance, which would pay for someone to do the grocery shopping for them. But, at roughly $25 per hour, many seniors can't afford to hire a personal shopper. "People are house rich and cash poor," said Horsefield.

When the escort shopping service began, Barrett said the van picked up shoppers one day a week. That has grown to two days, and may soon be offered three times a week, because of the great need for the service. However, in order to keep the program going, more volunteers are needed.

Currently, the CEA has an "acute need for van drivers and escorts," said Horsefield. During the summer, many volunteers go on vacation, and others who are retired spend their winters in warmer climates. Horsefield said currently, she has about 50 drivers who she would consider "active," but when her "snow birds go away," for the winter, she said that number decreases.

Barrett said retirees in the 60-75 age range make up a large portion of the volunteers who help out at the CEA. Because many have had full-time jobs in other towns, providing a service to the town they live in is something they are eager to do. "They have worked all their lives, many outside the town, and haven't had a chance to give to the community. This allows them to become involved and give of themselves," she said.

When taking on a new van driver, Horsefield said there is an orientation process they must go through, which trains them in the proper way to help the seniors get on and off the van and make sure everyone riding in the van is buckled properly. Barrett said sometimes new drivers will meet with one of the more "seasoned" drivers, to learn firsthand what the process is all about. Barrett said new drivers often get a helping hand from those seniors who know the community well, and are able to help direct the group on its journey about town.

In addition to the escort shopping services, the CEA provides transportation to seniors within a 15-mile radius of Cohasset. This means transportation to medical appointments is covered, as well as trips to local stores or coffee shops, and lunches at the CEA. Barrett said many of the outings are a chance for social interaction, and give the seniors something to look forward to.

In addition to driving, volunteers are greatly appreciated to help out in the kitchen during luncheons, and in the office. "We rely on the office help so much," said Horsefield. Barrett said sometimes students from the high school or even Girl Scout troops will volunteer their time at the CEA. "The younger people do a great job," she said.

But even with the best planning and scheduling, none of the programs can be offered without volunteers to make it happen. "We're searching for people who can help us out," said Horsefield. With a tight budget and a limited staff, volunteers are the only way the seniors in town can continue to receive CEA services.

But Barrett and Horsefield are quick to point out, the experience is beneficial for both the seniors who utilize the services and for the volunteers. "All of our clients have a story and lots of them have lived here all their lives," Horsefield said. By talking with the seniors and getting to know them better, volunteers and staff are continually gaining more insight not only about the individual, but about the town and the community. "They become our friends, and hopefully, we become theirs," said Horsefield, adding a relationship like that is priceless.

For more information on the Cohasset Council on Elder Affairs, please contact either Outreach Specialist Carol Barrett or Volunteer Coordinator Martha Horsefield at (781) 383-9112. The CEA is open Mondays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., and Wednesdays and Fridays from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Selectmen hold sewer talks behind closed doors

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Members of three town boards convened in executive session at noon Tuesday to discuss whether the town is in compliance with a court order to solve its wastewater woes in certain areas of town.

Although the group was challenged by both the press and a concerned citizen on whether the discussion should be conducted in executive session, the door was closed and members of the public were not permitted inside. Town Manager Michael Buckley said the meeting was called to order and a vote was taken to go into executive session, but members of the public were told they could not stay before that happened, and therefore did not witness the vote taking place.

While the court agreement — dubbed the Second Amended Final Judgment — involved years of litigation and negotiation, costing the town hundreds of thousands of dollars in legal bills, the issue was resolved and an agreement was reached several years ago.

Under the Open Meeting Law, executive sessions can be called to discuss strategy regarding pending litigation.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan as well as selectmen Ronnie McMorris and Ralph Dormitzer were present, as were sewer commissioner Ray Kasperowicz, health board chairman Steve Bobo, acting Town Manager Michael Buckley, Town Counsel Paul DeRensis, and Daniel Coughlin of Tutela Engineering, the sewer commission's engineering consultant.

With pressure from proposed multi-unit developments, including Cedarmere, Avalon, Jerusalem Road Estates, and the Cook Estate, sewer access and capacity has become the subject of much public interest. CEES (Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions), a grass-roots group of homeowners in the Little Harbor and Atlantic Avenue areas, is also concerned that sewers promised to their neighborhoods might not be kept due to capacity and cost issues.

The purpose of Tuesday's session was to prepare for a meeting with representatives for the Department of Environmental Protection and Attorney General in Boston slated for yesterday (Wednesday) morning. The DEP is involved to insure the town is following the Second Amended Final Judgement.

The developers and homeowners seeking sewer capacity have a vested interest in what town officials discuss with the DEP regarding the judgment.

After convening the meeting in open session, the group entered into executive session on the advice of DeRensis. DeRensis told the Mariner because the town may be in violation of the Judgment, the executive session was needed to discuss pending litigation.

While possible litigation is not considered a viable reason to enter into executive session under the Open Meeting Law, DeRensis said the discussion may lead to an emergency amendment of the amendment, which could possibly mean changing the current Judgment to include a timeline for the sewering of Little Harbor. He said that means the group would need to discuss its strategy, which is covered under the Open Meeting Law.

Sullivan said minutes would be taken but declined the Mariner's request to have the meeting taped. Executive session minutes become public when the reason for the executive session is no longer valid.

The Mariner asked for the meeting to be tape recorded in order to listen to the discussion after the issue with the Judgment is finalized and the executive session minutes can be released. Sullivan told the Mariner this meeting would follow the same standards as all other executive sessions and not be taped.

DeRensis said the Wednesday meeting with the Attorney General and DEP would also be in executive session (see related story).

The Judgment's history

Although the town was issued the Second Amended Final Judgment in 1996, the issue of sewering the Little Harbor area of town has been a point of discussion since the 1970s. In 1975, Cohasset was the first town in the state to receive a citation under the Clean Water Act when the town's treatment plant was cited for violations of its permit. The town then became eligible for federal money to expand, refurbish, and modernize the town's existing treatment plant. However, the town kept voting the plan down.

In 1979, the state took Cohasset to court to complete upgrades to the sewer plant, and in 1980, was given the first judgment. The state said it would fine the town $10,000 per day unless it went forward with a project which would sewer the major parts of town with the highest populations, while also being large enough to accommodate additional use in the future. The town also had to develop alternative plans for homes not included in the new sewer project. Town meeting approved the project, although the state did fine the town one token penalty of $10,000.

In 1981, funding for public works was delayed, stalling the project, but by 1982, the federal government began releasing the funds again, and Cohasset was given the green light for the sewer project again.

However, a group of residents opposed the project, which led to a lengthy legal battle with the state. In 1988, the town approved a debt-exclusion override of $2.2 million to hook up to Hull's wastewater treatment plant. But later that year, state funds dried up.

The judgment remained unenforced until 1994, when the Attorney General's office dug out the old files and decided to enforce the agreement. But completion dates for implementation of the agreement had long-since expired.

In 1996, the state revised the plan with new dates. The revised plan became the Second Final Amended Judgment.

The new agreement called for the town to undertake a number of sewer projects. The town would build a sewer in North Cohasset and expand the sewer system in central Cohasset. A third key element of the agreement was a plan to implement an on-site wastewater management plan for homeowners in environmentally sensitive areas of town. The key areas are a section around Lily Pond, and a triangular area where Nichols Road, Jerusalem Road and Atlantic Avenue intersect.

The sewer commission and the board of health have been working with CEES to continue the preliminary design of the Little Harbor/Atlantic Avenue Sewer Expansion effort, as approved at the 2002 annual Town Meeting. The sewer extension will help eliminate private on-site wastewater disposal systems, which are negatively impacting the water quality of Inner Little Harbor, Little Harbor, and Massachusetts Bay, resulting in the closure of area shellfish beds. It is intended to expand the wastewater treatment plant's capacity by 150,000 gallons per day, to allow the "Little Harbor Sewer District" and "Atlantic Avenue Sewer District" to be connected to the existing municipal sewer system.

At the Annual Town Meeting, $100,000 was allocated to help with phase two of the project, which includes costs associated with design and permitting. Construction costs are being deferred until a later date. When completed, the project will fulfill the last requirement of the Second Amended Final Judgment.

Board member leaves meeting to keep public out

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer intended on participating at a meeting with representatives for the Attorney General and the Department of Environmental Protection yesterday, but left voluntarily to enable the meeting to be conducted in private.

According to Dormitzer, the meeting, which was held in Boston, "Involves the state's enforcement of the Second Amended Judgment," which requires the town make improvements to various sewer systems, including the Little Harbor area.

"I was extremely anxious to know what was going to be said," in the meeting, said Dormitzer, but in the interest of helping move the conversation along, he volunteered to leave. "The problem is with the number of people who were there."

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan and Selectman Fred Koed were in attendance at the meeting, and with Dormitzer present, it resulted in a quorum. Also in attendance were sewer commissioner Ray Kasperowicz, health board chairman Steve Bobo, Town Counsel Paul DeRensis, and Daniel Coughlin of Tutela Engineering, the sewer commission's engineering consultant, as well as various representatives from the state.

Dormitzer said an attorney for the state did not want the meeting to be a formal meeting of the board of selectmen, and if all three selectmen stayed, the meeting would have had to be open to the public. The meeting was posted at Town Hall.

"The state wanted a frank and open discussion," said Dormitzer, which he believes some felt would not be possible without having the meeting closed to the public.

DEP spokesperson Joe Ferson, said it was pointed out at the beginning of the meeting that having a quorum of selectmen present would make the meeting public, and when Dormitzer left, the town made the decision to keep it private.

However, there may not have been an issue if members of the public had not driven to Boston to attend the meeting. According to Dormitzer, David Calhoun and Tom Ragno, principals of the proposed Cedarmere senior housing development, wanted to attend the meeting, but were asked to leave when it was determined the meeting would be private.

Sullivan said he wasn't sure if he would be able to report what occurred during the meeting, even though it was not held in executive session. He said he would like to speak to Town Counsel first, and did not get back to the Mariner before press time. Representatives from the Attorney General's office would not comment on the meeting and directed the Mariner to speak with Cohasset Town Counsel on the matter.

Health insurance option for seniors

The Council on Elder Affairs would like all seniors to be aware that Prescription Advantage — a prescription drug insurance plan which is available to all Massachusetts residents age 65 and older, as well as younger disabled residents who meet certain criteria — will conduct an annual open enrollment period Sept.1 through Sept. 30, 2004. The effective date of coverage will be Nov. 1, 2004.

Residents who are not currently receiving prescription drug benefits under Medicaid and are age 65 or older, or under 65 and work 40 or fewer hours per month and meet MassHealth's CommonHealth disability requirements are eligible for the plan. Individuals under 65 years of age can join at any time during the year.

Prescription Advantage applications can be obtained through Cohasset Elder Affairs at (781) 383-9112, through the company's Web site at www.800ageinfo.com, or by contacting the plan directly at 1-800-243-4636. In addition, CEA Outreach Specialist Carol Barrett is available to answer questions and/or assist with completing the Prescription Advantage application.

shouting and threats of a revolution ensued.

Greenbush is the controversial, third leg of the Old Colony Railroad Restoration project which would return train service to Cohasset and other area towns after nearly 50 years.

Some residents feel the former ombudsman from the Waterfield Design Group – hired for the village revitalization and James Brook flood control projects – did not properly address their concerns. With her resignation from Waterfield in May, and the departure of former Town Manager Mark Haddad, who was handling some of the larger MBTA issues and leaving the smaller ones to the ombudsman — abutters to the tracks feel they have no one to go to for help solving Greenbush problems.

Although Waterfield has appointed another employee to serve as ombudsman, abutters would prefer having someone from town and have suggested appointing Tom Gruber, the former Greenbush mitigation committee chairman. The mitigation committee helped the town determine what impact the return of the train would have on Cohasset.

However, selectmen thought the issues would be best handled at the board level for now, and suggested a list of all the abutters' concerns be compiled, so they would be properly documented and the board could address as many as possible. "All the issues need to be understood, and they need to be handled at the board level," Sullivan said. If the board could help step into what Haddad's role used to be, it may help facilitate a move in a positive direction while the town decides what to do about the current ombudsman, he said.

But Pratt said what abutters want is a local resident who knows the neighborhoods and the issues and can serve as the ombudsman for the town and didn't think selectmen were a good substitute for that. "We want something else," he said.

Sullivan said having the board in charge would be a positive thing, and it would be able to work with everyone to resolve issues. The crowd was reminded the town has a contract with Waterfield for the ombudsman position, which somewhat limits its options.

However, the resounding cry from audience members was they don't think a five-member board is going to be able to serve as the advocate they need, and one person who is from the town and familiar with all the issues, such as Gruber, will be better suited for the position.

Pratt said only a few weeks ago, Craig Miller, head of the Waterfield Design Group, said his firm was not going to be aggressive with the MBTA. "The CEO of that company stood up and said, 'If you don't want an aggressive advocate, don't look to us.'"

Wig Pierson, 123 Atlantic Ave., stood up and said to the board, "It's incredible you're not listening to what the people want and they want an ombudsman and you refuse to give it to them." Pierson then proceeded to give the definition of an ombudsman, and said that person should be appointed by the government to investigate individuals' complaints. He said complaints have not been addressed and they want someone from town to be their ombudsman. "When are you going to wake up and smell the roses that you can't go on pig-headed the way you want to go?" he asked. Pierson's statements were followed by applause from the crowd.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris told the audience the board does not want to go in a different direction from what the abutters want, but the fact is, the town received money for the ombudsman position as part of the MBTA agreement, and used the money to employ someone to handle the issues. Things may not have worked out as planned, but the board is working to try to resolve the matter.

But Pierson told the board, "You're appointing an ombudsman from the town and that's the end of the discussion."

Kathy Fox, 8 Black Rock Road, said while "it's great (the board) wants to get involved," she said there is no reason to reinvent the wheel, as a mitigation committee was formed years ago and a list has already been compiled of abutters' concerns. She suggested using those people who served on the committee to help in the process now, rather than going back to ground zero and having the selectmen try to gain all the information over again. It was also said that the ombudsman never spoke to Gruber to see what the needs of the citizens were.

However, Sullivan said Gruber never reached out to the ombudsman.

Gruber said he met with each member of the Waterfield Design Group involved with the MBTA and briefed everyone on the concerns facing abutters. "Everything I said went over everyone's heads." He said Haddad was not a detail person, and despite Gruber's suggestions, Haddad let "opportunity after opportunity go by."

Sullivan responded, "that's not true."

Selectmen stood firm in their decision to serve as the main conduit for complaints by abutters further incensing some of the audience.

"All of us are telling you what we want you to do," said Pierson, adding, "If you want a revolution, it'll start now."

Requests turned into demands, as Pratt told the board it "will" appoint an ombudsman from the town. "That's what you're going to do."

Selectman Fred Koed tried to smooth over the issue and said it is clear there are some irate people in the audience, and they deserve to have someone they feel can handle their issues. He said it was evident they want someone from the town to be that person, and maybe that should be looked into.

McMorris asked how many in the audience have contacted the Waterfield Group and have not received a positive response. Quite a few in the audience raised their hands. However, Sullivan said many people may not have received the answer they wanted, which doesn't mean their concern wasn't addressed.

Breaking the contract

Selectman Rob Spofford reminded the audience, regardless of what they might want, the town is in the middle of a contract with Waterfield, and "I'm not going to void a contract we've signed." There is nothing in the contract that allows it to be broken based on performance issues, he said. The only way to get out of the contract is to ask Waterfield if it would be willing to release the town from the contract, and even then, protocol would require the new ombudsman be chosen through a specific hiring process. A Request for Proposals would need to be sent out to advertise the position because it is a paid position which will require signing a contract. "What you're going to get from me tonight is not action," Spofford said.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer then made a motion to vote on whether the board should ask Waterfield to relieve the town from its contract. "Then a process can be started to make sure the right person comes in," Dormitzer said. Waiting until October for the contract to run out is a long time to wait, and this would allow the town to take action, he said. The current ombudsman is only paid when work is done, meaning the town isn't losing any money by beginning the process over again. The ombudsman position is being reimbursed by the MBTA as part of the mitigation agreement.

McMorris reminded the audience the board does not do the hiring and firing in town, and that a new ombudsman would need to be appointed by Buckley. There was some talk about whether the contract would allow the town to keep the Waterfield ombudsman and also have a point person in town, possibly Buckley.

But Pierson stood up once again and said "We want one person. Poor Michael Buckley is doing 50 jobs already." Pierson then said the board didn't want to hire someone from the town "because of your own reasons." He said if the board didn't follow the will of the abutters, "We will be in your face as long as it takes."

Many abutters said they have never been contacted by the MBTA with any information regarding their property, and some have not contacted the ombudsman because they don't have any complaints. They say the cannot have complaints because they don't have any information. "There are a lot of unknowns. This is just the tip of the iceberg," said Gruber.

McMorris said that is why the meeting was so important. It allows the selectmen to hear the problems being faced by abutters and get a better feel for what is going on.

Gail Whitehouse, 17 Ash St., said to McMorris, "Once again, you're unknowingly skirting the issue." While Whitehouse isn't a direct abutter, she will be impacted by the train, and said she too wants information, even thought it might not have a huge impact on her property. "Tom (Gruber) was with us at every meeting. He's the one I know can stand up for me," she said. She added the board doesn't have the time to spend working on the issues abutters face and because the MBTA, "Is a horrible organization to work with," and the bottom line for them is money, the abutters need a strong advocate. "Don't look at us and tell us 'we'll take care of your little issue,' show you care," she said.

The conversation continued back and forth, with selectmen saying this is the first they heard about many of the issues, and the abutters saying they hadn't known about meetings that were held by selectmen with the MBTA. Sullivan said the ombudsman was there to reach out to people who reached out to her.

The board agreed to discuss the issue again at a meeting in the next few weeks, and will work on drafting a job description for a new ombudsman in the meantime.

The crowd reminded the board there was a motion on the table which was made by Dormitzer, to ask Waterfield if it would consider releasing the town from its contract. Buckley was asked to make the call to Waterfield and he indicated he would do so. The crowd wanted selectmen to take a vote to make it official, but the board didn't think it needed to vote. Pierson asked why the board wouldn't vote and the discussion went back and forth about whether the board needed to vote or not. Spofford said Buckley was asked to make the call, and a vote was therefore not necessary. The crowd became suspicious about why the board wouldn't take a vote. Eventually, the board took the vote, which was unanimous, but some were unhappy it had come to that point.

"If we ask the Town Manager to do something, and he says he will, it's an insult to the Town Manager," to take the vote, because it suggests he won't do what he said he would do, Spofford said.

However, Pratt said the town should learn from its prior mistakes and taking the word of the Town Manager hasn't always worked in the past. "We have three years that didn't quite work well," he said.

That was the last straw for Sullivan who immediately called the hearing to a close. "I have seen nothing but people who don't want to work together. Goodnight."

As the crowd was filing out, Buckley was approached by Pratt who asked him about a comment he had heard Buckley had made. Pratt asked whether Buckley had said there was no way he would hire Gruber as the ombudsman for the town long as he was the Town Manager. Buckley said that is exactly what he had said. The two had words, which was all caught on camera, although the microphones were shut off.

Patient Safety: Nothing Is More Important

Marvin J. Lipschutz, MD
Senior Vice President
Clinical Affairs

Patients put their trust in us — and it is our responsibility to demonstrate that we deserve that trust.

Publicity about some patients' experiences at South Shore Hospital has called into question whether we are doing everything we can to keep our patients safe. Given some of the sensational headlines, we believe that is a fair question that deserves straightforward answers.

We keep patients safe by having the right people, with the right qualifications, to meet the needs of the 150,000 hospital and home health patients we care for each year. Recruiting, educating, and retaining a talented and compassionate health care team is fundamental at South Shore Hospital.

We keep patients safe through the expertise of our 700-member medical staff, which is larger and represents more specialties than any other hospital in the region. Every physician undergoes a rigorous credentialing process before earning privileges to admit a patient to our hospital. All physicians joining our medical staff must become board-certified, a standard few Massachusetts hospitals require. And then, every two years, each medical staff member must be re-credentialed — a process that helps assure that only qualified physicians remain affiliated with our hospital.

We keep patients safe by assuring that certain physicians are on-site — not just on-call — 24 hours every day. South Shore Hospital is the only hospital in the region to have board-certified obstetrician/gynecologists, internists, surgeons, critical care intensivists, anesthesiologists, pediatricians, and neonatologists on-site to respond to patient needs any time of the day or night.

We keep patients safe by employing 1,150 nurses — more than any hospital in the region. Our nurses average more than 15 years of experience, and many have earned advanced specialty certifications. Nursing care is only provided by licensed caregivers. We have chosen not to reduce costs by allowing non-licensed staff to provide nursing care. That kind of savings isn't worth potentially compromising patient safety.

We keep patients safe by partnering with leading academic medical centers to bring their medical experts to our region. These physicians work at South Shore Hospital through clinical affiliations we have with Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center, Brigham and Women's Hospital, Children's Hospital, Dana-Farber Cancer Institute, Massachusetts General Hospital, and Tufts-New England Medical Center.

We keep patients safe by standardizing care and minimizing variations that can lead to errors. For example, since implementing protocols for every critical care patient who temporarily depends on a machine to breathe, none have developed pneumonia — a complication related to mechanical ventilation. We also take part in national studies where "best practices" are tracked, monitored, and shared. One example is our participation in a national cardiology database, to help measure how effectively we care for those experiencing heart attacks. As a result, we know our patients have a 22 percent better chance than the national average of initially surviving the most common type of heart attack.

We keep patients safe by fostering good communication among the dozens of different people involved in a hospitalized patient's care — physicians, nurses, case managers, pharmacists, therapists, social workers, nutritionists, family members, and others. Patients feel better — and safer — when they recognize a sense of community and teamwork in their care.

As talented as our staff is, we know we aren't perfect. We use technology to help safeguard against human error. One isolated patient-identification matter in our maternity center prompted us to immediately introduce the use of sophisticated electronic bracelets to assure that the right newborn is paired with the right parent. Another matter involving the quantity of medication that one physician ordered for one patient led to a swift adjustment in our drug-dispensing systems. And questions about safety in our emergency department have been addressed through improvements in how we prioritize which patients need care first.

No one can promise that medical care will be risk-free. There are many variables involved that can't always be anticipated or controlled. The human body is complex, and the processes involved in caring for it are even more so.

But one thing is certain: There is nothing more important to us than patient safety. It is the surest way to earn our patients' trust, satisfaction, and confidence. And for us, there is no higher priority.

For a blue moon to occur, the first of the full moons must appear at or near the beginning of the month so that the second will fall within the same month (the average span between two moons is 29.5 days). July 2004 will have two full moons: the first on July 2, the second on July 31-that second full moon is called the blue moon.

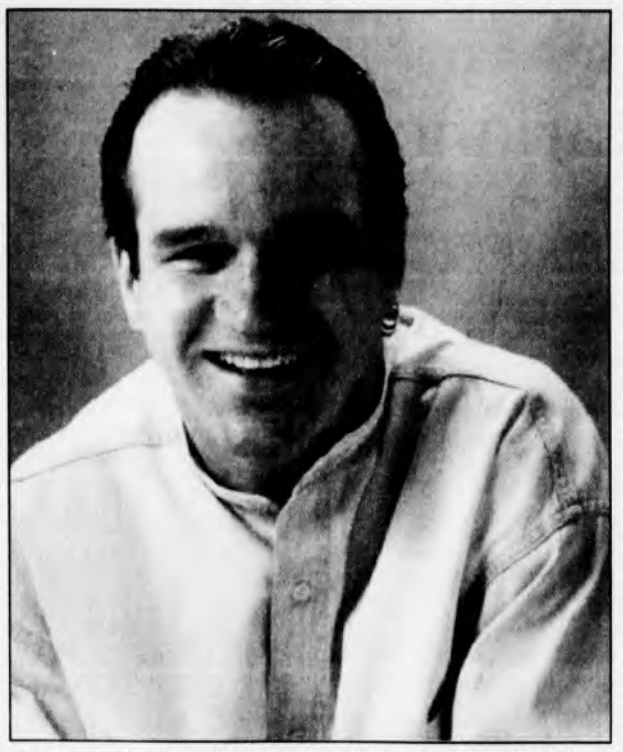
Comedian stands up for the troops stationed overseas

By Cynthia McManus
CORRESPONDENT

For those who think that entertaining our troops overseas died with Bob Hope:

Think again.

Cambridge native and local standup comic Joey Carroll, appearing this weekend for two shows at the Red Lion Inn's Bitter Man comedy club in Cohasset has taken his trademark rapier-sharp wit on the road in a big way.



"You meet people you would never meet otherwise and you find out you have all sorts of things in common."
— Joey Carroll

In a decision that would understandably give anyone pause, Carroll has since 1999, traveled annually to the Balkans to bring a little bit of home to US troops stationed in such far away posts as Bosnia, Kosovo, and Sarajevo.

"The troops are the most appreciative crowds I have ever entertained in my career," explained Carroll who has been in the business of making people laugh — and think — for 12 years.

"It's the most rewarding thing I have ever done," making it a point to remind anyone who will listen that "if [the troops] didn't do what they do, we wouldn't have what we have. That's why I keep going back."

As Carroll describes it, the tours aren't easy. Unlike USO shows, which are heavily sponsored with private funds, affording entertainers amenities like hotels, reliable and comfortable first class transportation as well as gourmet meals, the Department of Defense tours are the closest thing to being a soldier without actually having to enlist.

Joey Carroll is at the Red Lion Inn's Bitter Man comedy club this weekend.

"When we are with the troops, we live like the troops. We eat their food, sleep in their tents, get up at five o'clock in the morning just like the soldiers, which is tough — as a comedian I am used to going to bed at that hour, not waking up!"

A typical DOD entertainment tour involves a grueling schedule of 32 shows in 28 days, with travel from place to place by bus or jeep, sometimes decked out in "Full Battle Rattle" (Kevlar vests and Brain Buckets) for trips to remote camps that can span days and hundreds of minefield and sniper-strewn miles.

"It's kind of brutal," Carroll acknowledges, referring to the lack of sleep and the ever-present awareness of landmines and armed rebels, "but I get to go home after a month or two. They don't."

His good-natured grousing about the living conditions aside, it is clear he doesn't mind the hardships a bit, observing that the rough and tumble DOD tours allow him and other entertainers to develop a relationship with their audience that just isn't possible when on a USO tour.

"You meet people you would never meet otherwise and you find out you have all sorts of things in common" when the entertainers sit down to eat and talk with the troops. He relates a story about a female soldier he met at Eagle Base in Tuzla, Bosnia. Their conversation is one that seems to choke him up even today.

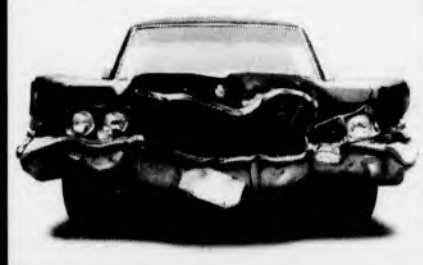
"She and I talked for a long time. She had never been away from home before. She missed her family, she missed her home. We ended up talking a lot about those kinds of things, about feelings mostly. It really touched me. That is why I do this."

He says he has learned a lot about the sacrifices the soldiers make, not only for those back home, but for the people in the countries that they serve — and he makes it a point to underscore his assertion that soldiers, despite fear and despite hardship, willingly do the job they signed up for.

"There's no whining," he explained. "No one thinks twice, they just go. They just do the work they were sent to do."

"What they see as normal life is just crazy," noting that the ever-present danger and risk of attack, the rebel fighters, the evidence of genocide all throughout the Balkans is one the soldiers never fully accept — but the troops try to take it in stride, most trying to help the people they are protecting in small and touchingly poignant ways.

"The good stuff never gets reported, and that bothers me. Like the Blackhawk chopper crews who took their own money, bought teddy bears, stuffed them with candy and dropped them out of the helicopter with little parachutes attached so the kids would find them — it's a shame that the media doesn't tell those stories. There is so much good that they do."



Carroll will be working stateside until the fall. He will then be embarking on his annual tour, this time with a stop in Iraq. He is admittedly worried about what he has heard about the country, but ready to give back to the troops a little bit of what they have given to him.

"You aren't so much an entertainer as you are a goodwill ambassador. How better to tell these people, 'Thank you for giving us the life we live' than giving back to them."

Joey Carroll is ready, willing and always happy to do so.

Joe Carroll appears at the Red Lion Inn 1704 Resort's Bitter Man Comedy Club 71 South Main St., Cohasset, July 23 and 24. Tickets are $10 and reservations are strongly recommended. For reservations, call (781) 383-1704.

Budget variances

We all live on a budget.

And no matter how much money you make – if your bills are more than you take in, sooner or later you're going to be in trouble.

The difference between the wage earner and government, however, is the well. The average person doesn't always have a well to go to, unless he or she has a generous relative, and therefore has to cut expenses. But towns can go back to us – the taxpayers.

But taxpayers aren't always a bottomless pit or easy to deal with. They aren't necessarily forgiving when budgets run in the red. Case in point, unlike Cohasset, many towns have never passed a Prop. 2-1/2 override.

Prop. 2-1/2 is the 20-something state law that caps the amount of money a town can raise its tax levy from year to year without voter approval.

We think one of the best ideas to come out of Town Hall lately is providing monthly reports of any line-time budget variances to the board of selectmen.

This way, the selectmen and town manager can deal with cost overruns as they crop up and figure out why they're happening. While there may be no easy answers, at least there won't be any surprises.

While the voters have no control over the school budget, making up about half of Cohasset's total budget — apart from approving the bottom line at Town Meeting — monthly budget reports about line-item variances on the school side are also needed.

We understand unlike the town side of the budget, whose line items are approved by Town Meeting, schools can move money around to accommodate unforeseen expenses, such as additional schoolchildren moving into town. But monthly variance reports would still be useful in letting the school committee know early on if the budget is in danger of being out of balance.

It's hard for taxpayers to understand where the all the money goes without having it clearly spelled out.

Monthly reports about what may be out of whack budget-wise will go a long way toward helping keep taxpayers and town officials informed about overruns before they get out of hand.

Volunteers needed

If you can drive and enjoy people, then serving as a volunteer van driver or escort shopper for senior citizens might be for you.

Many of our seniors want to remain in their homes as long as they can. But in order to do that, they need help getting to medical appointments and shopping centers.

The shopping escort service offered by the Council on Elder Affairs is so popular that the CEA is putting out a call for more volunteers.

CEA Volunteer Coordinator Martha Horsefield said many seniors in Cohasset have too many assets to qualify for financial assistance. So, at roughly $25 per hour, many seniors can't afford to hire a personal shopper.

Helping a fellow citizen can yield its own rewards. Not only are most seniors a lot of fun to be with and interesting to talk to – but giving something back to the community is also a fulfilling endeavor.

Call the CEA at 781-383-9112 or stop by the Senior Center at 3 N. Main St. to sign up.

Sewer priorities in commentary praised

TO THE EDITOR:

I complement Dr. Richard Brooks on his excellent Commentary article in the Cohasset Mariner dated July 8, 2004, entitled, "Put the Cook Estate on Hold." This article should be required summer reading by all Cohasset residents and Town officials. It reflects a broad understanding of the overall sewer issue in Cohasset and contains pertinent facts and thoughtful analysis of the facts developed in a realistic, sound and sensible manner.

While large housing projects line up for sewer access, we seem to forget that the intent of providing wastewater treatment capacity in Cohasset was to improve and restore the quality of the ground and surface water and hence to protect the environment and health of the Town. The intent was not to spur development of the Town and to change its character. Areas in Town which have been identified as environmentally sensitive should be given priority over developers should excess wastewater treatment capacity become available: Your earlier editorial calling for a sewer forum was most appropriate. It is important that the Selectmen, Board of Health, Planning Board, Conservation Commission and Sewer Commission unite and develop a comprehensive long range sewer plan for the Town. At this time, it is important for them to ensure that any excess sewer capacity that becomes available from the Cohasset wastewater treatment facility or which can be purchased from Hull should be used to for its intended purpose. That is to serve and protect the health of the existing residents of Cohasset and not for the profit of outside developers. I agree with Dr. Brooks. Any developer should be required to build an on-site wastewater treatment to serve their development.

Ongoing effort to save teachers

TO THE EDITOR:

The school committee has voted to accept the funds raised by the Save 3 Teachers Committee, which will restore two of the three teaching positions sought at the Osgood and Deer Hill Schools. These teachers will go to grades 2 and 3. I would like to express my gratitude to the members of both committees and the superintendent, but also to the hundreds of people who contributed to this fund raising campaign. Thank you.

Our work is not done, however. We have two important jobs remaining. The first is to raise an additional $4,840.38, which will allow the principals greater discretion in hiring teachers with experience. Checks are still being welcomed for the next 2 - 3 weeks, payable to the CEF and deliverable to 272 N. Main St. Our second task is to make sure that these three teaching positions are permanently reinstated in next year's budget.

Please raise your voice, again and again, locally, and on the state level. Let your school committee and selectmen know, by phone, letter and email, that you support the reinstatement of these teaching positions to next year's budget. Inform Representative Bradley, Senator Hedlund and Governor Romney that you want Cohasset's share of the $700 million state surplus returned to the town of Cohasset. While the short-term solution has been reached (almost), the long-term solution lies in state aid restoration. An active and vocal citizenry can make this happen. Please do your part.

Sandy Beach Fund

TO THE EDITOR:

Mrs. Morton provided the Mariner with a copy of her letter.

To: Dr. Robin Merrill Lawrence
President, Sandy Beach Association

As a longtime (49 years) Sandy Beachgoer, I wish to express to you my thoughts regarding the advertisement in The Mariner listing certain contributors to the Sandy Beach Fund.

I think this ad gives the message that only contributions of $100 or more, are of value.

It is my opinion that every contribution should be listed or none.

HEALTH NOTES

Explanation for Sandy Beach closing

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Recently, Sandy Beach was closed for two days. Since this closing was a surprise for many, an explanation is in order. First, the Cohasset Board of Health did not close the beach, the Sandy Beach Association (SBA) closed it, presumably because of a report of a smell and debris on the beach.

The SBA then requested sampling because there was evidence of a report of sickness from the water. The board of health, having received two calls concerning illness from people on the beach, responded by indicating to management of the SBA that it would conduct sampling as soon as possible. The board is required by the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) and the Department of Public Health (DPH) to close a public beach if an illness is reported. However, discussions with the two callers to the board indicated that neither had a condition which was related in any way to Sandy Beach. Since the closing was done on a Saturday, beach sampling, regularly scheduled for Tuesday, was advanced to early Monday, the first time it was possible to have the sampling done. The results were available on that Tuesday morning. It is not known by the board of health when the beach was reopened to swimmers, but on that Wednesday all seemed back to normal.

Beach pollution is rare on Sandy Beach since it is not near any sources of strong effluent pollution.

It should be known, that beach pollution is rare on Sandy Beach since it is not near any sources of strong effluent pollution. Over the weekend of July 10-11, there was a report of numerous cooked lobster shells in Cohasset Cove, attributed possibly to debris from a clambake at the Sailing Club being redistributed by gulls picking the barrels in the vicinity of Government Island. But even water in the Cove during an outgoing tide makes a wide swath well away from Sandy Beach. And the board of health ensures that the water at Sandy Beach is changed by the authorities (God and the moon) at least twice daily.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Since the June 28 opening day of its summer session, the Center for Student Coastal Research off Parker Avenue has resumed several of its ongoing research projects to monitor the quality of the town's water resources. Additionally, with the assistance of Bill Walton, Ph.D., an aquaculture specialist at the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute (WHOI), the CSCR has begun one new study — an exploration into the viability of aquaculture in Cohasset.

As one of the primary runoff sources for Cohasset Harbor, the Gulf River is essential to understanding and controlling the fluctuations in the harbor's pollution levels. Fulfilling its goal of "teach[ing] students how to research real environmental issues in coastal communities," the CSCR trained participants of the Gulf River Study to operate the various instruments designed to measure the chemical health of the Gulf River, which runs through Scituate and Cohasset, eventually emptying into Cohasset's Little Harbor. In addition, students were taught the proper techniques for data collection and analysis, culminating in the testing of actual data from three ecologically-diverse sites along the river. According to Jack Buckley, president of CSCR, data from previous years indicates that "relatively speaking, the mouth of the Gulf River is clean compared to the Gannett Road and Scituate marsh [two upstream test sites]."

The study's primary goal is to determine whether aquaculture could be profitably supported in Cohasset Harbor.

Learning and working in tandem with the Gulf River Study, participants in the micro-bacteriological field study were taught various techniques for gathering accurate results from the same sites, including the Gannett Road causeway, Mushquashcut Pond, and the North Scituate causeway. Participants will test for enterococci bacteria levels, the current standard used to determine bacteriological potency. Emphasizing the importance of the project, Buckley noted that "there is a very high fecal coliform [count] in the upper reaches of the Gulf River, and the enterococci [counts] continue to be extremely high."

In addition to providing a basis for examining the correlation between the runoff from river sites and the pollution levels in the harbor, the data obtained in this study will also help to establish a relationship between chemical pollutants, such as ammonia by-products — nitrites and nitrates — and the growth of bacteria in the river's environment.

The newest study, the Viability of Aquaculture Study, has a twofold purpose. The study's primary goal is to determine whether aquaculture could be profitably supported in Cohasset Harbor. Secondly, in conjunction with various sites scattered along the Massachusetts coast from the Cape and Islands to Westport, the MIT-funded and WHOI-supported project proposes to evaluate the optimal conditions for commercial aquaculture in the Bay State. Initiated by Kelly Hurley, CHS '04, the program will begin this year with the installation of three oyster-quahog growth troughs – one in the harbor's inter-tidal zone, one in a marsh region, and one at the mouth of the Gulf River. In addition, Hurley has installed a quahog trough along the town pier and another one in Sandy Cove. Students working on this project will take precise bi-seasonal measurements of the oysters' and quahogs' growth. These data will then be correlated with data from other sites statewide.

Lastly, the Cohasset Harbor Study, led by CHS science teacher David Ames, continues to monitor enterococci, salinity, and dissolved oxygen levels in the harbor, continuing the work of previous years' students.

The CSCR announced that "a full, detailed report will be released at the end of the month," which will include analysis of Gulf River and Little Harbor health. Alternatively, community members can contact the CSCR for information: tel: 781-383-0129; e-mail: jbuckley@cohassetk12.org.

U.S. decathletes at pre-Olympics dinner

July 31 fundraiser for American team

By Andrew Dassori
CORRESPONDENT

For nearly a century, the decathlon has been the all-encompassing, ultimate event in track and field.

Dan O'Brien knows that. He's the 1996 Olympic Gold Medallist in the 10-event contest.

Paul Terek knows that. He's a U.S. decathlon hopeful.

Both men want to help bring the gold medal back to America in the decathlon this summer at the Olympics, Aug. 13-29 in Athens, Greece. But the US decathlon team needs financial help.

Enter Dr. Eric Diener of Bay State Chiropractic in Weymouth. Diener, who is the team chiropractor for the U.S. decathletes is sponsoring, along with state Sen. Robert Hedlund, a "Bring Back the Gold" fundraising event at the South Shore Country Club in Hingham starting at 7 p.m., July 31.

According to Diener, VISA, a corporate sponsor for the decathlon team through the 1990s, dropped its support as a cost-saving measure. "Myself and other doc's have stepped up to the plate to help," he says.

"We need people to help contribute to the decathlon team and at the same time have an awesome night."
— Dr. Eric Diener,
Bay State Chiropractic

Diener has arranged for O'Brien, Terek and decathlon team coach Harry Marra to be on hand to meet the guests at the dinner event that includes speakers and an auction.

"It should be very exciting to have world-class athletes in Hingham," Diener said. "We need people to help contribute to the decathlon team and at the same time have an awesome night."

The decathlon consists of the 100-meter dash, long jump, shot put, high jump, 400-meter dash, 110-meter hurdles, discus, pole vault, javelin, and 1500-meter run — the winner of the two-day long competition in the summer Olympics is viewed by many as the world's greatest athlete.

The Swedish created the decathlon in 1911 for the 1912 Olympics held in Stockholm. Since then, it has been one of the most storied events in Olympic history, with the likes of Jim Thorpe at the head of the pack. Thorpe was declared "The World's Greatest Athlete" by King Gustav V of Sweden in 1912 setting the stage for the decathlon to become an Olympic highlight.

Although the United States has fared well overall in Olympic competition, in the decathlon — America has lagged behind its competitors since O'Brien came away with the gold medal in 1996.

Diener says doctors that attend the team have banded together to have fundraisers for the decathletes. All proceeds from the July 31 event go to the World's Greatest Athlete Decathlon Club that will support American decathlon athletes in the off years between the Olympics, he says.

"These ticket donations really help the athletes compete," Diener says. "I know at the Austrian meet in May we had trouble getting everyone's pole vault poles on a plane and out of Europe in time and it cost! It's not easy shipping 18-foot poles on a plane."

With the Olympics only a few weeks away, raising money for decathlon athletes is crucial.

"The Decathlon team really needs help, they can only send one coach due to financial constraints. We want to bring back the gold," Diener explains. "This fundraiser will go along way to help future U.S. decathlon athletes compete if we can build a war chest for these amateur athletes to draw on."

There are three levels of tickets available for the July 31 event. Gold tickets ($1000 donation) include 18 holes of golf with O'Brien, coach Marra and Terek, a private cocktail hour with the athletes, and dinner. Silver tickets ($100 donation) include the private cocktail hour and dinner, and Bronze tickets ($50 donation) include an autographed picture of O'Brien and dinner as well. For tickets, call (781)337-7777.

The US Decathlon Team includes Terek, Tom Pappas and Brian Clay.

Britney Spears and her fiancé

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I see where those crazy kids, Britney Spears and Kevin Federline, are planning to tie the knot — a slip knot, no doubt — in that well-known matrimonial palace, the Beverly Hilton Hotel.

At least they had the good taste to wait until her fiancé's girlfriend, Shari, had his baby before the ceremony. Shari's used to it, I guess. She already has a daughter, Kori, by Kevin.

But there are certain aspects of the Britney/Kevin romance that leave me goggle-eyed.

I rarely think of myself as a prude. I even held my tongue when they called Roberto Rosselini "the second mate on a Swedish tramp" for his affair with Ingrid Bergman on the Isle of Stromboli.

But there are certain aspects of the Britney/Kevin romance that leave me goggle-eyed.

For one thing, is it her first or second marriage. It's the second if you count the 55 hours of wedded bliss she spent with her visiting high school sweetheart Jason Alexander after their New Year marriage in Las Vegas.

No, that's not Jerry Seinfeld's Jason. It's the one from Brit's old home town in Louisiana. Brideless, he was sent back home in time for Mardi Gras, presumably with large sums of money in his hand.

Britney met Kevin at Joseph's Café in Hollywood, where the lamb souviaki on rice pilaf sells for $16 and the manager now shows tourists "the Britney Booth," where she was sitting at the time.

"I always sit at the same table," she told People Magazine, in the manner of General Schwartzkopf explaining the Gulf War to CNN. "On the far right, in the corner where I can see everything."

One of the things she saw was Kevin, who was a backup dancer behind Justin Timberlake, once the great and good friend of Brit's for three years. (Can you afford lamb souviaki on a backup dancer's salary?)

"He was just standing there," said Brit. "He was like a magnet. I was being pulled. It was beyond my control. It was like, 'Hi, just come with me.'"

Being no fool, he did, of course, and, naturally, show business being show business, she invited him to go along while she toured Europe and, naturally, he did. She proposed to him in the way back.

The experts, taking time out from analyzing the war in Iraq and the search for Osama bin Laden, figure that the Brit/Kevin wedding will cost up to $1.8 million, including $180,000 for special white tulips flown in from Amsterdam just for the occasion.

I'll bet the Jason Alexander caper didn't cost Britney half as much.

And what about Shari Jackson, Kevin's pregnant girlfriend, who may have given birth by now? She's as pleased as anyone for the happy couple.

"After I meet (Britney) and everything's all cool, we can be one big happy family," she said.

"I love little ones," said Britney. "I think the situation is good."

"I hope Britney likes to baby-sit," said Shari.

Like I say, I don't think I'm a prude, but . . .

municipal side of the town budget. According to Buckley, the unemployment costs, which are typically covered by the town and reimbursed by the school department at a later date, were not included in the school budget, and therefore must be included as an appropriation deficit to be taken care of at Town Meeting. Buckley explained that typically, the town sends out the money to cover unemployment costs for both the town and schools, then the town is charged for its portion and the schools are charged for theirs. "For whatever reason, they didn't charge it to themselves," said Buckley.

Shea said what might have happened is when the bills started coming in at the end of the year, it was decided the unemployment bills could be deferred a little longer than the others because the schools pay back the town, which would buy the schools some time to see if they would have money to cover the cost.

Shea said the unemployment costs "jumped up quite a bit this year." In FY 03, the schools incurred roughly $24,000, when only $7,500 was budgeted, and this year, the costs jumped up to $75,000 with just over $10,000 budgeted. "Based on the history of the account, it's unusual," said Shea, adding this is not an account where it is expected the costs will come in at such high levels.

There are between 11 and 13 town employees currently receiving unemployment, roughly eight or nine of which are school employees. Buckley said every month, a bill was sent by the town to the schools, outlining unemployment costs, to allow the administration to track the amount of money going out. "To the administration, it should not have been a surprise," said Buckley.

Shea said he found out about the school's deficit around the same time as Buckley. Buckley said Malvey informed him of both the unemployment and energy costs on June 29. Malvey's last day on the job was June 30, as was Business Manager Ivan Klimko's. Klimko, however, has been coming in to help new business clerk Karen Park in closing out this year's books.

Moving forward

School committee member Jamie Williams suggested having Keyspan come in every two or three months to take actual readings instead of giving estimates.

Shea said that will be something to look into.

Member Rick Flynn said the energy costs may have been high this fiscal year due to the extreme weather this winter and he is optimistic the costs will not be as drastic in the future. "I can't imagine it could be much colder this winter," he said.

Roy Fitzsimmons, 116 Doane St., asked if Keyspan certified that the meter was accurate. "I'm sure we've got people in town who could take a look at it," he said.

Shea said that would also be looked into and added part of the motivation to postpone payment was to investigate the validity of the meter.

Flynn said he would guess Keyspan just underestimated the amount of gas the schools would use. The company may not have taken the expansion of the schools into consideration and could have been going on former figures of building utilization.

Shea stressed the importance of having the town fill the maintenance supervisor position, which was funded at the annual Town Meeting in March. The town approved $40,000 for a part-time maintenance supervisor who would be responsible for oversight of maintenance of the $55 million investment in buildings around town. Flynn said if the position could be expanded to a full-time position, "It'll pay for itself." Selectmen have also discussed expanding that position to become full-time.

Shea also said there are probably more conservation measures the schools could take, such as turning off lights and computers when not in use. While the schools have been commended for their efforts, and have received rebates for energy conscientiousness, there are always steps that can be taken to help conserve power.

However, member Chartis Tebbetts said sometimes when power is turned off completely, it costs more money when the lights or computers are turned on again because of the sudden surge.

Shea said with the classroom lights, he did not think that was the case, but reiterated this is another reason why the town needs to hire an expert.

The school committee was slated to come before the advisory committee last night (Wednesday) after the Mariner went to press to discuss the budget issue. The next meeting of the school committee will be Aug. 9 in the high school library.

Beacon Hill Roll Call

By Bob Katzen
beaconhill@aol.com

July 12-16

Senator Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) (617) 722-1646 Room 413F

Representative Garrett J. Bradley (D-Hingham) (617) 722-2120 Room 472

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Cohasset Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for more than 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on six roll calls and local senators' votes on four roll calls from the week of July 12-16.

UNIVERSAL HEALTH CARE (H 4444)

The House and Senate sitting as a Constitutional Convention 152-41, approved a proposed constitutional amendment providing universal health care to all Massachusetts residents. The proposal requires the Legislature and governor to approve laws to ensure that no Massachusetts resident lacks comprehensive, affordable and equitably financed health insurance coverage for all medically necessary preventive, acute and chronic health and mental health care services, prescription drugs and devices. Another provision provides that the actual laws approved by the Legislature and the governor take effect only if approved by voters at a statewide election. Supporters said skyrocketing premiums are making health care unaffordable for many families and for employers who fund coverage for their workers. They noted that some 600,000 Massachusetts residents do not have any health care coverage and argued it is time for the state to ensure that each citizen is provided with this basic right. Some opponents said the measure is well intentioned but vaguely worded and could result in the courts deciding the meaning of words like "comprehensive" and "affordable." Others said the proposal would cost taxpayers $3 billion and argued that the federal government, not the state, should develop a solution to the health care problem. The measure would become part of the state's constitution if approved by 25 percent of the 2005-2006 Legislature and then ratified by the voters on the 2006 ballot. Any laws approved by the Legislature and the governor to accomplish the universal health care goal would go on the 2008 ballot at the earliest. (A "Yea" vote is for the proposed universal health care constitutional amendment. A "Nay" vote is against it).

$52 MILLION SPRINGFIELD BAILOUT (H 4799)

House 136-21, Senate 38-0, rejected Gov. Romney's amendment reducing from $52 million to $22 million the amount of the interest-free loan the state would provide to the financially strapped City of Springfield. Amendment supporters said the $30 million cut is irresponsible and urged members to support the full $52 million in order to ensure that Springfield recovers from this fiscal crisis. Amendment opponents said that the city has successfully accessed credit markets on two recent occasions and argued the $22 million is now sufficient. (A "Yea" vote is for the additional $30 million. A "Nay" vote is against it).

ALLOW GOVERNOR TO APPOINT INTERIM SENATOR (S 2404)

House 22-135, Senate 7-32, rejected Gov. Romney's amendment to a bill that takes away the power of the governor to appoint a temporary replacement when a U.S. Senate seat becomes vacant in Massachusetts. The bill requires that a special election be held within 145 and 160 days and replaces a current that law gives the governor the authority to appoint a temporary replacement and then provides that voters elect a senator at the next general state election. Romney's proposed amendment establishes a system for the governor to appoint a temporary replacement to serve until the newly elected senator is sworn into office. Under the system, either the House speaker or Senate president would have to agree to governor's proposed appointee. If neither legislative leader agreed to any three consecutive nominees by the governor, the governor would be allowed to unilaterally make the appointment. Amendment supporters said that without the amendment, Massachusetts would have only one senator in the U.S. Senate for several months until a new senator is elected and sworn into office. They argued that including the two legislative leaders in the process would result in a fairer selection process. Some amendment opponents said this power sharing between the governor and these two leaders is unconstitutional because the constitution clearly gives any appointment power solely to the governor. Others argued that the temporary appointee would have an unfair incumbent advantage over others seeking the office. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment).

APPOINT INTERIM SENATOR AND MAKE HIM OR HER INELIGIBLE (S 2404)

House 15-142, rejected an amendment allowing the governor to appoint a temporary replacement to serve until the newly elected senator is sworn into office and making the appointee ineligible to be a candidate for election to the vacant seat. Amendment supporters said this compromise would ensure that the state has two senators until the special election and addresses concerns that any appointee would have an unfair advantage over other candidates. Amendment opponents said the amendment is intriguing but clearly unconstitutional because it is essentially a term limit proposal that bars someone from running for office. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment. A "Nay" vote is against it).

REIMBURSE COMMUNITIES FOR SPECIAL ELECTION COSTS (S 2404)

House 29-129, rejected an amendment requiring the state to reimburse cities and towns for the costs of any special election to fill a vacant U.S. Senate seat. Amendment supporters said it is unfair to ask struggling communities to add to their financial problems by bearing the costs of an additional election that is mandated by the state and could have a price tag of up to $10 million. Some amendment opponents said the state has never reimbursed communities for these costs and should not set a new precedent. Others said they are not opposed to state reimbursement but argued that the bill is not an appropriation bill. They noted that the Legislature has the option to approve reimbursement if and when an election occurs. (A "Yea" vote is for the reimbursement amendment. A "Nay" vote is against it).

FILLING VACANCY IN U.S. SENATE (S 2404)

House 128-30, gave final approval to the bill that takes away the power of the governor to appoint a temporary replacement for any U.S. Senate seat that becomes vacant in Massachusetts and instead requires that a special election be held within 145 and 160 days. Supporters said the current 100-year-old appointment system is archaic and takes power away from the voters by allowing a governor to unilaterally make this important appointment that could last more than two years. They argued that the temporary appointee would also have an unfair advantage as an "appointed incumbent." Opponents said the bill is sponsored by Democrats who fear Gov. Romney would have the opportunity to appoint a Republican to fill Sen. John Kerry's seat if Kerry wins the November presidential election. They noted that holding a U.S. Senate election in a very short period of time would give an unfair advantage to incumbent Democratic congressman with huge war chests and make it difficult for lesser-known, underfunded citizens to mount an effective campaign. The Senate gave final approval to the measure on a voice vote and sent it to Gov. Romney. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill. A "Nay" vote is against it).

HIGH INTEREST MORTGAGE LOANS (S 2431)

Senate 39-0, gave near final approval to a bill designed to protect consumers that seek unconventional high cost home mortgage loans from non-prime lenders. Provisions include requiring borrowers to receive credit counseling prior to closing the loan; prohibiting lenders from increasing the interest rate if the borrower defaults; limiting the financing of points and fees and requiring lenders to have a reasonable belief that the borrower has the ability to repay the loan. Supporters said the bill would protect consumers from predatory lenders who take advantage of people who have poor credit and cannot qualify for a conventional loan. They noted the measure would allow legitimate non-prime lenders to continue to offer a reasonable alternative for these people. They also said the bill includes provisions that strengthen existing protections for consumers who obtain conventional home mortgages. The House has approved a different version of the bill and the Senate version now goes to the House for consideration. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).

Cohasset Town Manager Act may not need overhaul

Selectmen always had power to veto the Town Manager

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Town Manager Act may not be broken after all.

That seems to be the consensus among members of the new committee appointed to review the Town Manager Act and make recommendations on potential changes.

However, the advisory committee could have a greater role in the budget process and the selectmen can exercise more oversight over the town manager.

But neither of those potential recommendations would require actual changes to the Town Manager Act, passed by Town Meeting back in 1997 and then enacted by the state Legislature.

The TMA has come under scrutiny since the abrupt resignation of former town manager Mark Haddad in May after seven years in the post.

Acting Town Manager Michael Buckley noted chipping away at the TMA itself could be counterproductive, setting the clock back to the days when Cohasset wasn't as professionally managed.

But when asked about what he would change, Buckley raised the issue of giving the advisory committee more clout in the budget process as was the case before the TMA.

"That's not part of the act, that's the way it has evolved," Buckley said.

Dan Evans, who sits on the review committee and is a former member of the advisory committee, noted before the TMA, it was the advisory committee's budget that went to Town Meeting. Now, the town manager presents the budget incorporating recommendations from selectmen and the advisory committee.

Review committee member Susan Kent, who is chairman of the advisory committee, questioned whether the town wanted nine, part-time people putting together a $30 million budget.

She explained the nine-member advisory committee currently plays an important role in the budget process by asking questions and pushing back on budget requests when necessary. She described the advisory committee as the "eyes and ears" of the townspeople and not a rubber stamp for budget transfer requests. "We have a lot to offer the town," Kent said.

Following the meeting, Selectman Rob Spofford, who also serves as chairman of the review committee, said it is a misconception that the TMA is a wholly powerful document.

"A lot of power is vested with the board of selectmen and it is up to the board of selectmen to utilize the powers it has."
— Selectman Rob Spofford, TMA review committee

"That's not the way it's designed," Spofford said. "A lot of power is vested with the board of selectmen and it is up to the board of selectmen to utilize the powers it has."

But with that being said, Spofford added no manual exists where policies and procedures could be formalized, for example, having Town Counsel review contracts of $50,000 or more. While that many happen generally, Spofford says, it doesn't necessarily always happen and a policies and procedures manual would ensure that it did.

Spofford expected Hingham's Town Administrator Charles Cristello and Duxbury Town Manager Rocco Longo would be guests at the review committee meeting last night (Wednesday) after the Mariner went to press. The committee said it would be useful to get an snapshot of how other towns run.

Plans are also to hold a review committee meeting dedicated to public comment.

However, as was the case with the committee's first meeting in June, several members of the public shared their views during Monday's discussion, including former selectman Tom Callahan, Nancy Garrison and Lou Harvey.

Garrison said before the town moves ahead with hiring a new town manager, a definitive job description is needed. She suggested selectmen be required to adopt a job description against which the town manager's performance is measured. She also wants the town manager to be subject to periodic peer review to insure that his or her performance maintains a high professional standard.

"I believe the long-term impact of these two related measures (job description and peer review) will eliminate the old pattern of crisis and reaction...and will place us in the prudent position of anticipating, and therefore avoiding crises, rather than reacting to them after they have occurred," she said.

Harvey suggested a recall provision be added to the Town Manager Act. "170 cities and towns have a recall provision in order to handle situations where elected officials fail to perform their duties." He said while selectmen have broad powers under the TMA, they failed to effectively use them. In a written proposal, Harvey also suggested several amendments to improve the budgeting process.

Callahan said while budgetary suggestions are great, in reality it's the school budget that throws the process out of whack. He explained that state law keeps the two budgets — town and school — separate. Prop. 2-1/2 overrides are 90 percent driven by the schools whose budget isn't usually ready until January, he said.

Spofford suggested the schools provide variances to their current budget on a month-to-month basis, as the town is going to start doing under Buckley's leadership. It was revealed at last week's selectmen's meeting both the school and town fiscal year 2004 budgets have large deficits. Fiscal year 2004 ended June 30.

COHASSET'S WEEK

School chief greeted by school committee

New Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh attended her first school committee meeting Monday and was given a warm welcome by board members. Walsh said so far, the transition into her new position, which she began July 1, has been going very well. "It doesn't take you very long to feel you're at home," she said.

Pleasant Street Parfait denied vendor license

The owner of the Pleasant Street Parfait was denied a license to have an ice cream cart at Sandy Beach by the board of selectmen. Because the board typically only grants two vendor licenses per season, it had to deny Burke's request. Burke said he had approached former Town Manager Mark Haddad who had insured him he would reserve a license. However, the board said it would not stray from the way it has conducted business in the past.

Preservation committee ponders two pocket parks

and is in disrepair — could not be saved.

"It would be a place for folks to stop and sit and observe Little Harbor as they walk up and down Beach Street," Marshman said.

According to the proposal from the open space committee, the park would include benches, a site for boaters to launch canoes and kayaks into Little Harbor, and a gravel "bump-in" to accommodate parking for two-to-three cars along Beach Street.

The open space committee proposal states the park would restore water views. "Homeowners along the water have increasingly erected fences and/or planted hedges, impeding vistas to the water. This project would restore those vistas and allow for them in perpetuity," the request states.

An estimated $800,000 is needed to acquire the property with another $25,000 to demolish the house and remove overgrown vegetation. The proposal is asking for $100,000 in CPC funds this fiscal year and $300,000 in fiscal year 2006. The Cohasset Conservation Trust, a private non-profit organization, has expressed interest in contributing $150,000 in grants and matching funds, and other money would be raised through state grants and privately. The Trust for Public Land, another non-profit, would help with bridge financing and fundraising.

Marshman said he was willing to put in $50,000 of his own money toward the project.

Before the potential acquisition can proceed, however, there are some legal issues surrounding the Gormley property that have to be cleared up with the estate since Gormley's mother passed away last year.

The abutters in attendance were not enthusiastic about the potential parking area and using the park to launch kayaks.

"A little park with a bench is fine but I'm against a recreational area," said Judith Chute, 46 Beach St. "I fear the cars and traffic a recreational area would bring."

Lou Eaton, 30 Beach St., said whatever is done needs to be in keeping with the residential area.

CPC chairman Stuart Ivimey suggested that Marshman "keep plugging away" and return when the legal matters are resolved and the project is closer to being finalized.

As an idea for a possible preservation project, Selectman Ronnie McMorris, who also sits on the CPC, suggested the committee might look at committing funds to purchase the small park in the village between Tedeschi's and French Memories, which is privately owned, to ensure that it remains as open space.

Some members of the committee seemed surprised the park was not town property and is maintained by local merchants. In an interview Tuesday, Ivimey said most residents don't realize the town doesn't own the park. "It's definitely something we could fund," he said about purchasing the site.

McMorris said she raised the issue with the downtown revitalization review committee and has been talking about it around town. "People are interested (in the town owning the park)," she said. "At times it can be a real eyesore.

"The money to buy the park would be well spent, ensuring that it is well taken care of and will always be there," she said, adding that the park provides a nice shortcut from South Main Street to Elm Street.

In a telephone interview, Selectman Ralph Dormitzer, who heads the downtown revitalization review committee, said the town owning the park would be "a wonderful idea."

Potential improvements to the Beechwood Street ball field, and installing a skateboard park and walking area behind the library were also floated as potential CPC projects at Monday's meeting.

The committee's funds must be spent on three areas: open space, historical preservation, and affordable housing. The CPC can use a small percentage of its budget for administrative tasks, such as appraisals.

The CPC doesn't spend money; it makes recommendations on spending to Town Meeting. The Community Preservation Act allows a town to partner with non-profits.

The town raises about $230,000 a year through the 1.5 percent real estate surcharge and with an anticipated 100 percent state match, the Community Preservation Fund revenues total about $460,000 annually. Left over money can be banked for future years. The fund has $162,000 available in fiscal year 2005 which is what was left after CPA projects were approved at the annual Town Meeting in March.

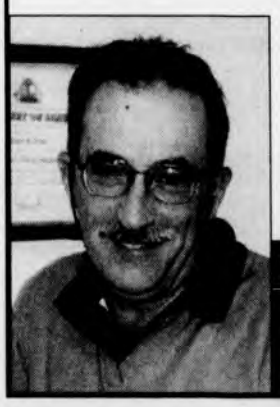
Town could raise surcharge

With voter approval, the town could increase its real estate tax bill surcharge under the Community Preservation Act to more than the 1.5 percent approved in 2001. Municipalities that have adopted the CPA can assess surcharges on real estate tax bills up to 3 percent.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris, who also sits on the community preservation committee, suggested the CPC might want to hold a public hearing to gauge support for increasing the surcharge to 2 or 3 percent.

With another 1.5 percent, the town could receive an additional $230,000 annual match from the state. Currently the state is matching 100 percent of monies raised by towns that adopted the CPA.

"It could double our income," CPC chairman Stuart Ivimey said.



The CPA surcharge in Cohasset is 1.5 percent of a property owner's real estate tax bill; however, the first $100,000 of assessed valuation on residential property is exempt from the surcharge.

Scituate has a 3 percent surcharge and Hingham's is 1.5 percent.

Grand finale

Post 118ers close tough luck season on a winning note

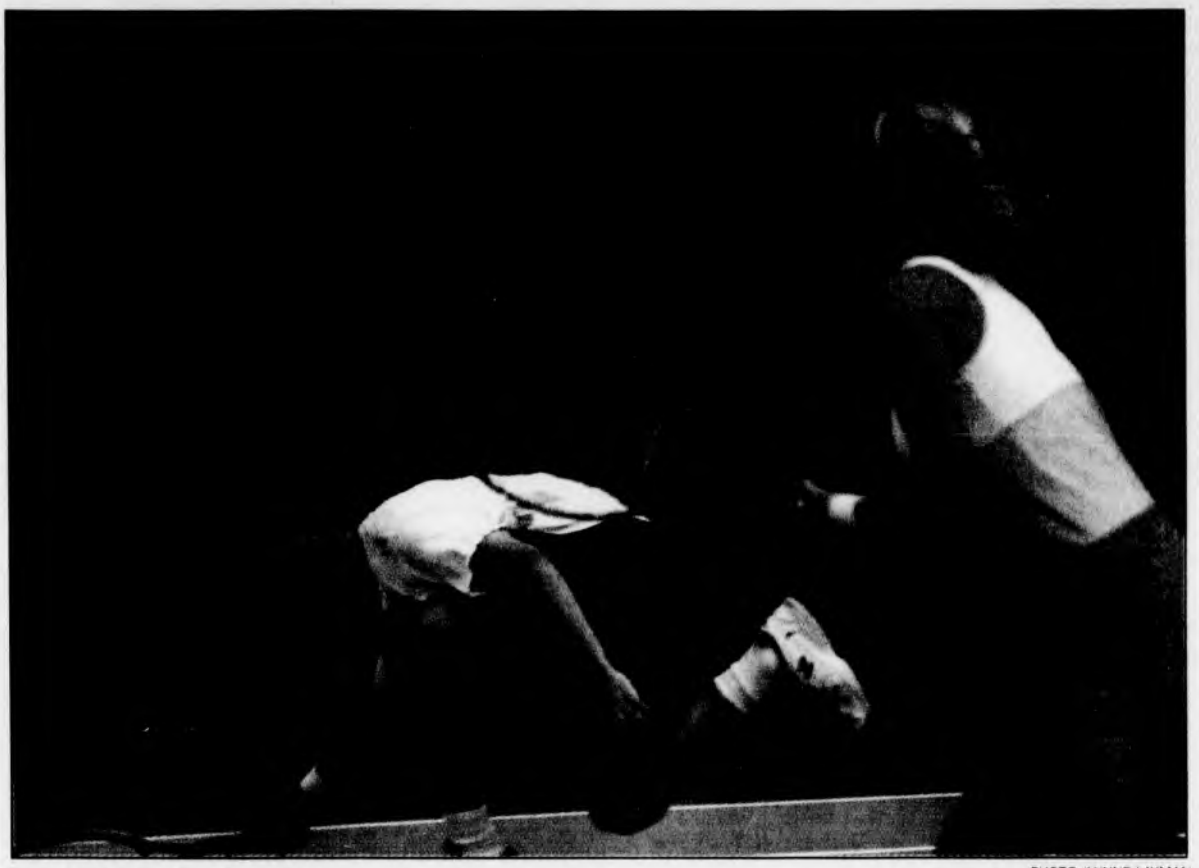
By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Honestly, the Post 118ers would have preferred to call this one a wash.

But West Roxbury, needing one more win to qualify for the Zone 6 Legion Baseball playoffs, was the home team and had the final call. That squad's powers-that-be insisted the game be played despite a day's long rain, last Tuesday, so G.H. Mealy Post 118 coach Mike Duggan obliged: he put together the minimum nine man roster to drive through the heart of Boston during the wet rush hour commute. And the locals came away with a 5-2 win, exploding with three runs in their final at bat to oust their hosts from the postseason picture.

"We figured we had to play it, so we might as well win it," said a smiling Duggan. "This was a great way to end a tough season. You had to feel good for these kids who stuck it through to the end."

Indeed, it had been 12 games and more than three weeks since the local Legion squad had come up on the winning end of a contest. Post 118 finished the season with a record of 2-16-1



From whichever angle one viewed this game going in, Cohasset had to be regarded as the underdog, beginning with the roster juggling Coach Duggan was forced to perform going in, all the way down to handing the ball to start the game to Kevin Signorelli, a little used pitcher during the season.

But Scituate's Signorelli, a senior-to-be at Thayer Academy, wove a gem, going five innings, scattering four hits and four walks. His slow pacing on the mound seemed to contribute to keeping the highly regarded West Roxbury hitters off balance, as he struck out six and only one of the two runs against him was earned.

"Kevin just had them guessing all night," lauded Coach Duggan. "He pitched an intelligent game."

After Signorelli, who had not

Benefit tourney a smash

Nearly $23,000 raised for Children's Hospital

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The 15th Annual Children's Hospital Tennis Benefit tournament, held last weekend across Cohasset, was, in tennis terms, a smash.

A total of 126 doubles players, mostly residents of Cohasset but a few from beyond, had the rare opportunity to use some of the nicest private courts on the South Shore, play competitive and exciting tennis, and just have fun. And it was all for a great cause.

"It was a great weekend," said Children's Hospital Tennis Benefit Committee member Carole Meers. "We had about 20 more players than we had a year ago, and raised more money."

Meers also reported there were more people watching the matches this year, particularly the finals at the Roy Estate on Margin Street, though she added there were certainly room for more.

"We were hoping to get a few more local people out watching," said Meers. "It really is a high level of tennis, and we had some beautiful sunny weather over the weekend. Hopefully, we'll get the word out a little more next year."

Meers and the rest of the Children's Hospital Tennis Benefit Committee-- Corey Alexson, Darilyn Evans, Sue Sookiasian, Lorraine Tarpey, Sandy Crough, Barbara Meers, Karen Mack and Tracey Thomas-- met at least once a week for three months to plan the particulars of the tournament. Luckily, finding courts was never a concern, as 21 families graciously donated the use of their gorgeous facilities.

The mixed doubles tournament, in its 15th consecutive year in Cohasset, raised nearly $23,000 for the Children's Hospital. The tourney is always held in the third weekend in July.

The event actually dates back 50 years, when Jesse Cox started the event in Cohasset, so this year's edition was originally being touted as the 50th Children's Hospital Tennis Benefit tournament. However, no one could confirm whether the event was held every year.

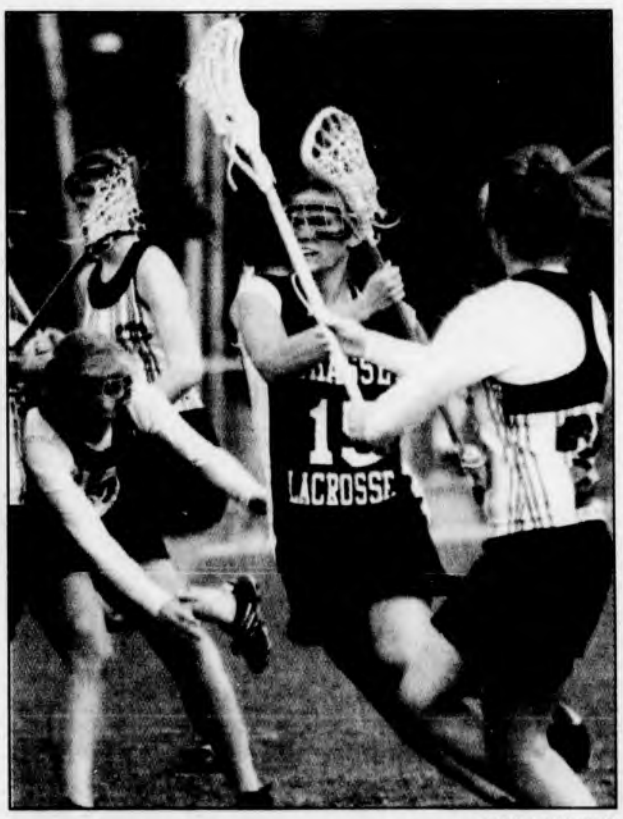
All-Scholastic girls lacrosse team

Cohasset's Faber, Rizotti and Turgiss named among area's elite

As always seems the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Several of the young women you see listed below as "Honorable Mentions" received serious consideration for All-Scholastic acknowledgement.



In the end, however, we limited ourselves to a team of just 14 and, after consulting with area coaches, we do feel secure that we chose the top female lacrosse players in Marinerland for this honor:

Ashley Faber - Senior (Capt.)
Third home- Cohasset

Ashley Faber

The quarterback at both ends of the field this season for the 9-8-1 Skippers...Pilgrim Conference All-Star...finished with 20 goals and a team best 18 assists, this despite concentrating much of her efforts on the defensive end to help a young core of players...a very tough player at both ends of the field who proved very strong on ground balls...an outstanding passer...four year varsity team member...key performer in Lady Skippers runs to postseason qualification each of the past three years...Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic Honorable Mention...also played basketball and soccer at CHS, earning Mariner All-Scholastic Honorable Mention for the latter sport this past winter...National Honors Society member...an Editor of CHS newspaper, The Spinnaker...has been an Appalachia Project volunteer the last three summers...works as a Lifeguard and swim instructor at Cohasset Swim Center...member of Social Awareness group at CHS...plans to play lacrosse and basketball at Connecticut College (Div. 3)...is leaning toward majoring in English...Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney: "Ashley meant so much to us at both ends of the field. With all of the injuries we had on defense, we would have been in huge trouble without her. She's just a gifted passer, really one of the best I've ever seen. She just sees the field so well."

Nicole Turgiss scored a team best 42 goals in her senior to give her a four year total of 108, making her only the fourth player in the history of the CHS lady lax program to top 100 tallies.

Lauren Rizzotti - Junior
Attack - Cohasset

Lauren Rizzotti

A n exceptionally skilled player who many feel w i l l emerge as one of the top players on the S o u t h Shore next season...finished with 41 goals (one behind team leader Nicole Turgiss) and 12 assists despite missing four games mid season to injury...arguably the Skippers most skilled overall player this season and one of their premier athletes as well...became the favorite target for fellow all-scholastic Ashley Faber for "quick stick" (catch and fire) scoring opportunities...Pilgrim Conference Honorable Mention...has been named a captain for next year's lacrosse team...also a standout in soccer at CHS...has been a winter cheerleader at CHS...has been voted President of her senior class...Honor Roll student...hopes to play college lacrosse...undecided on major...Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney: "Lauren has the potential to be a real special player. She's just such a good all-around athlete and skilled lacrosse player. If she stays healthy, she'll be one of the best all-around players in our area next year."

Are you what's wrong with youth sports?

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE SPELLMAN

After more than a half decade of virtual year round involvement in youth athletics, I feel relatively comfortable separating the vast majority of parents I deal with via this involvement into three categories.

Those in Category A get involved, the majority for the right reasons and with the best intentions, thereby opening themselves up to all kinds of criticism and speculation regarding their motivation. The veterans among us simply accept the fact that few good deeds goes unpunished.

Category B folks avoid direct involvement. Many of these moms and pops come to most games and are very supportive of the kids and coaches. This heading also includes those parents whose involvement ceases between the time their kid walks out the door and returns home. Of course, the majority of Category Bs fall somewhere in between.

She's been that way since her freshman year. I am going to miss her all-around personality…All of the kids on the team looked up to her and respected her. She worked hard but also knew how to have fun. She's the best skilled lacrosse player we've had at Norwell High so far."

I've never had anyone who works as hard as her. She loves the sport and works extremely hard at it. She was a force this year. She just wins every ground ball she goes for. She won't be denied."

She just made up her mind to do it and she did it. That's the kind of ability she has. She has the potential to be one of the top players in the state next year."

Carolyn Buckley - Junior Defense - Norwell

One of the most instinctive and versatile defenders on the South Shore…was centerpiece of a dominant defensive unit that keyed Lady Clippers program

She got the job done day in and day out. She was also extremely tough on ground balls. She just didn't seem to lose anything she went after."

Margot Spatola - Junior Attack wing - Hingham

Just a junior, Spatola is one of the most recognizable players on the South Shore…A two-time Pilgrim Conference All-star, Spatola led the Harborwomen in scoring with 82 points on 56 goals, 26 assists this season…Guided Hingham through a very difficult schedule, one in which it played five South Sectional contenders, to a 9-9 season and berth in the tourney…There, the Harborwomen topped Bourne (8-7) before falling victim to PC rival Norwell (11-7)…Spatola had many multiple goal games including a six-goal effort against Marshfield…Voted the team's Best Offensive Player two years running, Spatola netted 50 points as a sophomore…Played on the Southeast/Coastal team at the Bay State Summer Games and won a gold medal this month…Spatola has been elected captain of the lacrosse and soccer teams for next year and will also continue playing basketball at HHS. Hingham coach Cory Ford: "Margot has just been lighting it up. She is definitely our go-to person on offense."

Shannon Whitehead - Senior (Capt.) Center - Hingham

Played the difficult center position, taking the majority of the face-offs for the Harborwomen…Helped lead Hingham to a respectable 7-3 finish in the Pilgrim Conference and was named a PC All-star this year…Was among the team's leaders in assists, but was most valuable as the key to Hingham's transition game, getting the offense started from the backfield…Her tough play helped pace the Harborwomen to a 9-9 finish playing the difficult schedule they did, which included state finalists Framingham and Westwood, along with contenders Duxbury, Winchester, and Wellesley…Also a field hockey player at HHS, Whitehead plans to attend college in the fall. Hingham coach Cory Ford: "She moves the offense up the field and they feed off her. She's been vital to our defense and is very important to our transition game."

Lauren Jentzen - Senior (Capt.) Attack - Marshfield

Has been the leading scorer on the Marshfield team for the past two seasons…The two-time Pilgrim Conference All-star netted 87 points (65 goals, 22 assists) this year…Had 74 points in her junior season…Helped lead the Lady Rams to a 8-8-1 record, qualifying them for the South Sectional tourney for the first time in the program's history…There, the squad hung tough with Norwood, but fell 8-4…Speed was Jentzen's best asset as her quick feet and small frame allowed her to weave through opposing defenses…Also a standout soccer player at MHS, Jentzen guided the Lady Rams to an Old Colony League title and to the Div. 1 South finals…She will attend Div. 1 Syracuse University on a soccer scholarship next fall. Marshfield coach Sue Collins: "Lauren just always came through in the clutch. She knew how to go to the goal and is just a tremendous athlete."

Sandra Canuto - Senior Defense - Weymouth

Voted the MVP of her team this spring, Canuto was praised by her coach as being the consummate team player…Ran the Lady Wildcats' transition game from the defensive wing position…The Bay State League second team All-star always marked the opposing team's best player and did it well…Scored a trio of goals this season and racked up six assists, though she mainly played in the backfield…Helped guide the Lady Wildcats to a 4-13 record in the highly competitive Bay State League, home to three South Sectional contenders…Kept Weymouth within striking distance of state finalists Framingham…Canuto plans to attend Brandeis University next fall where she will major in Psychology and run indoor track…She may also play intramural lacrosse. Weymouth coach Chris Dion: "Sandra is one of those All-Around good kids who gave 150 percent all the time. She was a go-getter and would keep going until she got it. Her body position when marking an oncoming player is what made her most effective. She was difficult to lose once she got you. She was just so dedicated to the team and enthusiastic about the sport. A coach's dream."

Darby St. Claire-Barrie - Sophomore Goalie - Scituate

Identified as the key player in getting the Lady Sailors back to a winning record (11-9) and into the playoffs after a one year absence…this second year starter put in a lot of work on her game in the offseason, and it showed this spring, as she demonstrated improvement in virtually every area…saved 55 percent of the shots she saw (155-of—279)…among highlights was 26-save performance against perennial state power Duxbury…named team Most Valuable Player…Pilgrim Conference All Star…older sister Devon was a key defender on this year's Sailors team… Honor Roll student…also plays field hockey at SHS…plays lacrosse year round…plays in winter for Scituate teams at Hingham and Canton sports domes…plays club lacrosse in summer for Club Revolution…participated earlier this month in college showcase in Maryland…Student Counsel member…Peer Educator…sings in SHS chorus…hopes to play college lacrosse…Scituate coach Paula Evans: "Darby has been an enormous contributor to our team on and off the playing field for the past two years. If Darby didn't step into goal for her team as a freshman, our program may have suffered tremendously. It has been more then a pleasure to have known Darby as a person and to have worked with her as a player. She is an athlete that no coach would ever forget and I am very thankful to have known. Her attitude is amazing and her mental toughness is so powerful. She continues to enlighten all that surround her with her presence. I look forward to the next two years as her coach."

Alyse Kennedy- Junior Center - Scituate

An exceptional athlete who played a key role in getting the Lady Sailors (11-9) back to the postseason this spring after a one year absence…led the Lady Sailors in goals scored with 64 and scoring (78 points)… 14 assists were also second best on the team…tall, rangy athlete has outstanding speed, stamina and toughness set her apart…has a hard, accurate shot with both hands…Pilgrim Conference all-star…has been named a tri-captain for next year…also a standout in cross country and winter track at SHS, earning Mariner All-Scholastic honors in the former sport this past fall…as named a Mariner All-Scholastic Honorable Mention for lacrosse as a sophomore…Honors student…an avid equestrian…Appalachia Project volunteer…hoping to play college lacrosse, possibly at the Div. 1 level…plays lacrosse year round through the Mass Elite program…plays indoor lacrosse in the winter at the Canton and Hingham sports domes…Scituate coach Paula Evans: "Alyse has grown so much as a player. She now has the confidence in herself to do whatever it takes, whether it's on the attack or on the draw or getting to a ground ball. She's always working on her fundamentals. We all know she's very fast, but she's got the stamina too to stick with it, and she's got that quick speed burst that lets her get to groundballs."

Alex Lopresti - Junior Midfield - Braintree

A force at both ends of the field and arguably the most active player for the first year varsity program from her center midfield position …proved key at both ends of the field for Lady Wamps, who came up just one win shy (6-8-1) of qualifying for postseason play…the Wamps lone Bay State Conference All-Star, being named a second teamer…scored 16 goals, third best on the team, and was far and away the team leader in assists…also a BSC second team all-star in soccer for BHS…has been named captain of both soccer and lacrosse teams for next season…Honor Roll student…French National Honor Society…previously ran track at BHS…has taken part in several lacrosse camps over the last few years…participated in Premiere Lacrosse college showcases at UNH earlier this summer…hopes to play college lacrosse…looking at UConn, Northeastern and Quinnipiac College…leaning toward majoring in Physical Therapy…Braintree coach Theresa Richardon: "Alex was like my point guard out there. She was up and down the field all game, playing well in both zones. She was very fast and skilled and I basically counted on her to control the ball and settle the offense."

Each week this article will mention a few exceptional swimmers and races.

This past week Anna Serakis swam a very strong first in the 10 and under backstroke. Emma Hernan, an exceptional swimmer in all her events, was particularly impressive in the 17 and under freestyle. Ian Porter won the 50 yard breaststroke against some strong competition in the 12 and under event and Mimi Mahoney was a strong first in the 50 yard breaststroke in the 12 and under competition.

Are you what's wrong with youth sports?

Then there are those Category Cs: the ones who often leave those of us in Category A questioning whether our sacrifices are worth it. Any out there among you who've ever even helped coach a team know exactly what I mean, and probably know at least a couple of Category C parents. They're the ones who never even think to get involved but still think it's perfectly acceptable to critique what they think they see from the comfy confines of the distant sidelines.

Sigh…is it obvious I'm in middle of my Little League all-star season?

It probably wouldn't be all that bad if the Category Cs confined their remarks to other parents on the sidelines. Any coach who's been in it for a while could probably handle that. Our love of the sport and working with the kids could probably sustain us. Unfortunately, from what I've been able to discern, these remarks seldom remain on the sidelines.

Woe is me, the coach didn't play my kid the full six innings…I thought my kid was going to be an "A All-Star," not a "B"…my kid's better that that kid…my kids not being used the right way…wah, wah, wah , wah wah. Forget that parents are saying this to other parents; oftentimes, they're also saying it to their kids.

Yeah, that creates a healthy environment in the dugout. Before a coach knows what's hit, he's got a collection of mini-Allen Iversons who keep trying to spell team with an "I"— not that the Category Cs can see that end of it from the cheap seats.

Of course, many of your basic Category C types wouldn't think of going out and tossing their kid a bucket of balls or simply playing catch with him/her in order to improve their prospects of getting the role or playing time they want. That time would be better spent concocting grievances and unearthing manners in which they're being victimized.

I, and many of the people I'm proud to call friends, coach youth sports year round. Here's a news flash: none of us are perfect. We make mistakes. Sometimes competitiveness may even get the best of us. However, many of these aforementioned friends and myself have never spoken to a kid we've coached in anything that even resembles anger, but we have spent countless hours on the phone organizing and re-organizing game/practice schedules, working with kids in practice, memorizing rule books and studying up on ways to make ourselves better coaches. Then there's the weekly two hour practices, the showing up an hour before game time to get the field and the players ready and sticking around well after everyone else has left to clean up the field, not to mention the difficult game decisions that often leave us open to criticism.

And what's our reward? All too often it's an antagonized wife and family and/or the pleasure of hearing a parent complain openly over the fact their little all-star didn't get to play the whole game at second base.

You know what I say when one of my sons complains about his coach? I tell him the coach is sacrificing a lot to be there and that he deserves respect. I also suggest to my son that perhaps he'd be better served not dismissing the things the coach is doing or saying. If one complains about playing time, I tell him maybe he should spend a little less time on the X Box and a little more time taking grounders with one of his brothers or friends.

Parents, so long as a coach is not being mean-spirited or abusive, at a minimum, we owe him/her this much. If you have an issue with a coach, pull him/her aside and talk about it one-on-one in a civil manner. And what's discussed should remain there; end of discussion, literally.

The last thing I'm desirous of doing in this space is painting myself and my peers as victims. Most of us know these kinds of things go with the territory and are sustained by the knowledge we're doing what we're doing for the right reasons.

Of course, sadly, there are those who aren't sustained, those who say why should I kill myself to get out of work early two or three times a week when all I'm going to hear is complaining. I know a few moms and dads who've come to the conclusion it's simply not worth it.

And, y'know, it's funny: I can't remember anyone I've ever identified as a Category C stepping away from the sidelines and offering to fill the void.

been stretched out all season, surrendered a singled to leadoff the sixth inning, however, Coach Duggan went to Jack O'Leary to close it out.

"I'd wanted to make Jackie our closer all year, but there hadn't been an opportunity to save a game until this one," said Duggan of the hard throwing righty. "I really felt he was cut out to be a closer."

The Scituate High senior-to-be rewarded his coach's confidence, as he got the last six outs to pick up the win, three of them via the strikeout.

The misting rain held steady throughout, but at least field conditions weren't a concern, as the game was played on Catholic Memorial's new state-of-the-art turf field.

"What a beautiful field that was," said John Ciulla, father of Post 118 centerfielder and leadoff hitter Jeff Ciulla. "There wasn't a puddle on the field, and the footing was fine."

Good thing; one awkward slip might have made the difference between this emotional win and a forfeit, with Cohasset going with the bare minimum. Signorelli and Terence O'Brien were the battery to start the game. Joe Duggan was at first, Mike Barba at second, Jeff Radding at third, Scott Carroll at short and, left to right, O'Leary, Ciulla and Shane Caffrey in the outfield.

"Getting in there was a real pain. The drive was a mess. West Roxbury was probably hoping we didn't show, because a forfeit would have been as good as a win. But once we got there, other than the kids getting real wet, it was fine."

In point of fact, the Post 118 entourage did not pull into the CM parking lot until 5:35, 10 minutes before the first pitch was scheduled to be thrown. The nine players had time only to finish putting their uniforms on in the dugout and then throw the ball around for a few minutes.

"We didn't have time for infield, outfield or any other kind of practice," laughed Coach Duggan. "Maybe we should have used that approach all year."

Carroll posted the locals to a quick 2-0 lead. After Ciulla forced an errant throw to first by hustling down the line on what appeared to be a routine grounder, the Union College bound Carroll blasted his second home run of the summer season over the fence in left center.

With the score tied at 2-2 through six, Barba led off the top of the seventh with a clean single. He advanced to second on a muffed pick off attempt and then third on a fly out to right by O'Leary. Caffrey then brought him in with the go ahead run, smashing an 0-2 pitch off the fence in right center for a double.

Ciulla then drew a walk and Carroll lined a double to the gap to score Caffrey and move Ciulla to third. Ciulla came in a few pitches later on another passed ball to make it a 5-2 game.

O'Leary induced a pop up to West Roxbury's first hitter in the home half of the seventh, with shortstop Carroll making a nice running catch in foul territory behind third base. The hard throwing righty followed by striking out the next two batters to close out the game and the season.

"You've got to love all of those kids, coming out one last time to play in that," said Mr. Ciulla, who sat in the dugout throughout the game to stay dry and had five pizzas delivered to the field for a post game feast.

Post 118 will lose only two players to graduation, Ciulla and Duggan. These best friends since grade school and frequent baseball teammates up through the Little League will be starting their sophomore years at Endicott College and Mass Maritime Academy, respectively, next month.

"Getting to see those two guys play baseball together one last time made this a great summer for me," said Mr. Ciulla, who did not miss a single game. "It was an unexpected treat. It would have been nice if the team could have won a little more, but I can tell you that this was a ball for those two guys...and me too."

Rolfe has directed the Skippers to South Shore League championships and runs to the Super Bowl playoffs in 2001 and 2003. Playing in that game were two stars from Rolfe's 2003 championship team, recent CHS graduates Chris Bilodeau and Steven Davis.

Four CHS cheerleaders also made the trek: Ariel Siegel, Caitlin Sanchez, Katharine Murphy and Katie Dewal.

Benefit tourney a smash

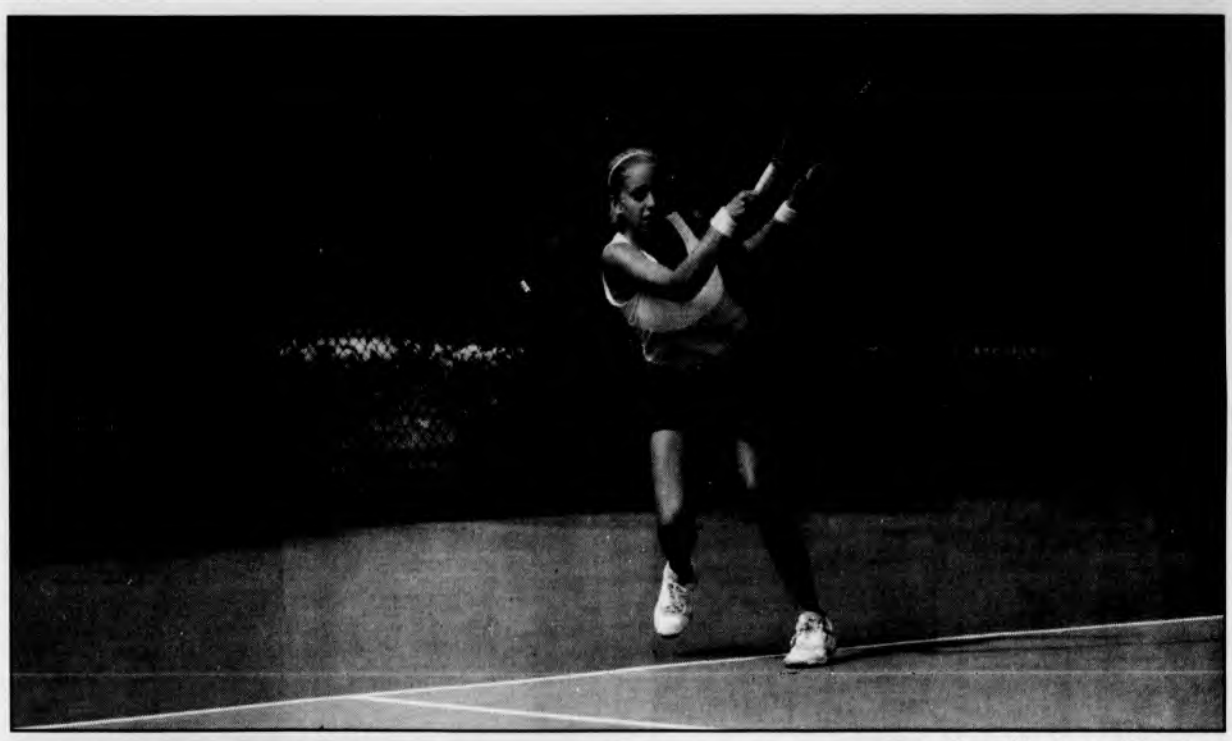
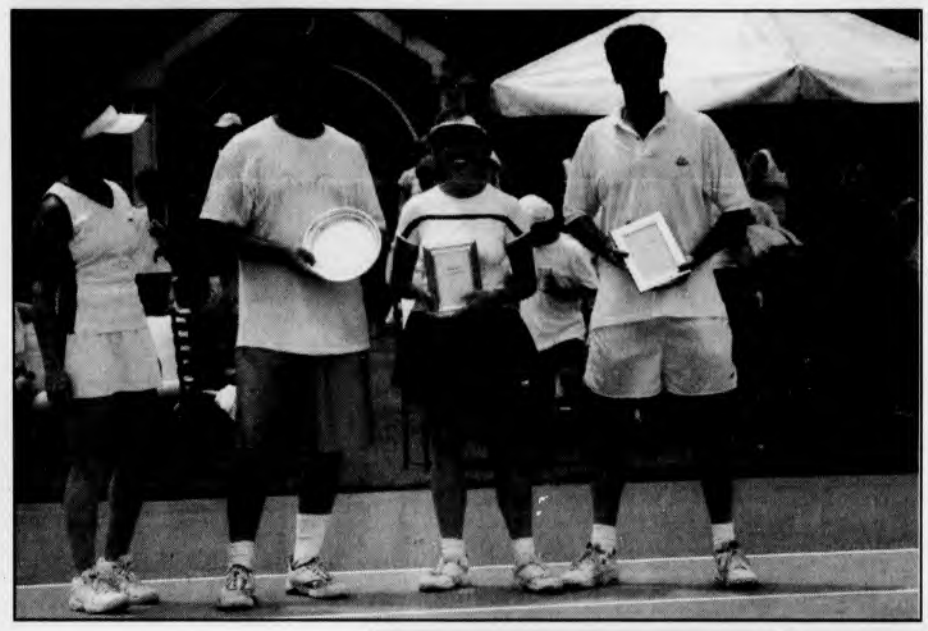
so the committee opted to stick with the "15" label.

"I don't think the tourney was as big or open in the past as it is now, so we're having trouble finding records for a few of the years in there," explained Meers.



On top of the cover charge to enter the tourney, the coordinator's of the weekend held a tremendously successful silent auction on Friday at the Lightkeepers Residence. All proceeds benefit Children's Hospital.

In the tournament, there were three different mini-bracket. The "A-level" was for highly competitive players, the "C-level" for those who play more for enjoyment than competition, and the "B-level" for everyone in between.



This year, former Mariner All-Scholastic tennis talents Brian Marsden (Hingham High, Class of '03) and Lindsay Grossman (Cohasset High, '03) won the A-level over Molly Adams and Matt Sizemore, making them runners-up for the second year in a row. Grossman, at Hobart College, and Marsden, at Trinity College, continued their tennis careers at the college level this past spring.

Cohasset's own Laura Chase and Gabriel Gomez won the B-category finals, ousting Donna Hayden and Ron Schwandt.

The Hingham tandem of Caroline Wehner and Gregg Stone topped Cohasset's Martha and Michael Gangami in the C-level championship. The win earned Wehner and Stone a berth in the B's for next year.

South Shore Conservatory addition opens to fanfare

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

At the South Shore Conservatory in Hingham on Monday morning, they were singing in the rain.

Well not exactly. The official opening of the new $3.5 million conservatory expansion was actually held inside away from the inclement weather in the bright new atrium of the new addition.

The dozens of conservatory supporters at the ribbon cutting didn't mind dodging raindrops from the parking lot to the event that included remarks, thank yous and a tour of the new facility.

"This is a wonderful day," said conservatory president Frank Wisneski, following a flourish of trumpets. "There will be a lot of thank yous given today."

Conservatory director Jim Simpson said the expansion allows all the arts — music, drama, and visual arts — to come together and have a home.

"A building can keep the rain, snow and cold out, but it's what is inside that counts," he said.

The project, which was undertaken in response to community demand for expansion of the conservatory's performing arts programs, adds three large ensemble classrooms, nine teaching studios and two art galleries. It also provides room for an arts-based full-day kindergarten.

"This is a wonderful day."
— Frank Wisneski, conservatory president

The conservatory, which also has a Duxbury campus, currently serves 3,000 students from 47 communities.

David Bryan, a member of the conservatory board of trustees and co-chairman of the capital campaign, said $2.9 million has been raised to date. "We are 80 percent of our way there," he said.

He said 300 have contributed, including individuals, families, organizations and businesses from throughout the South Shore. The South Shore Music Circus Charitable Trust and Hingham Institution For Savings were given special recognition for their contributions, among dozens of other people and organizations named.

Representatives from many businesses that participated in the Banner Program by contributing $1,500 or more were also in attendance and at one point, unfurled their banners during the proceedings. Each banner will hang in Cox Hall at the conservatory for a year and next July, the banners will be returned to the businesses for display.

Bryan noted that at "every level of the campaign people have been very supportive." Eighty-six donated $1,000 each for the brick campaign, he said.

He also thanked CBT Architects and Chapman Construction/Design.

Grand opening events this weekend include:

- 7 p.m., Friday, celebratory donor gala for those who have contributed to the brick program or higher. Music by faculty and students, tours and thank yous. By invitation.
- 7 p.m., Saturday, the final Evenings Under the Stars concert, a pops concert with Nicholas Palmer conducting and featuring the conservatory's Vincent Planes on piano. Lawn tickets are available by calling 781-749-7565 ext., 14 or at the door.
- 4-6 p.m., Sunday. Gallery opening for the South Shore Music Circus Gallery, featuring selected artists from the South Shore Art Center) and the Robert and Dorothy Palmer Galleries (a retrospective of Dorothy Palmer paintings and prints) co-hosted by the South Shore Art Center. Open to the public. No charge. Steve Deitz will serenade the viewers.

For information on how to contribute to the capital campaign , call Lanci Valentine at 781-749-7565 ext. 23.

The Conservatory, which was established in 1974, offers more than 50 programs and is the largest community music school in the state.

Village merchants offer up hospitality during weekly celebration

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

While ideas for Village revitalization have focused around sprucing up streetscapes and other exterior elements, merchants are trying to revitalize the area from the inside out, showcasing what is already there to draw more business to the area.

Coinciding with the Farmer's Market on the Common, local merchants will be holding a celebration of their own every Thursday from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. until early fall. "A Sampling of Village Hospitality," invites members of the community to come sample food, wine, and fashion, at no cost, as the merchant's way of saying "Thanks" to their customers for all the business they provide.

"The Farmer's Market began in the Village and was intended to benefit the Village businesses," said Amyra O'Connell, who along with her husband Cliff Chase owns and operates Village Wine & Spirits. However, when the Farmer's Market became too large, it had to move up the street to the Common. O'Connell said the merchants are trying to jump-start interest in the Village businesses once again, and all are very enthusiastic.

Many visitors from surrounding towns come to Cohasset for the Farmer's Market, and Brian Houlihan, head chef and owner of Bia Bistro, said many potential customers were coming to the area, but were bypassing the Village shops because there was nothing to necessarily draw them in. By having tables set up outdoors with food and drinks, the merchants would be able to host an event that would "bring (customers) into the Village," instead of having them walk by and never know the wonderful things the merchants in Cohasset have to offer.

Every Thursday, Houlihan prepares a dish from his menu for passers-by to sample. "Usually it's some kind of finger food," he said. Last Thursday, Houlihan prepared a grilled vegetable antipasto with tomatoes, onions, and various greens. Good Fella's Pizza, one of the newest businesses in the Village, brought two of their culinary creations to the table as well. A traditional margarita pizza with basil and mozzarella was served, along with a carmelita pizza, which is topped with caramelized onion, gorgonzola and mozzarella cheeses, as well as garlic and olive oil. Good Fella's has been operating for roughly three weeks, and is located next to Bernard's behind the Adrian Morris Salon.

To complement the food, various wines were available for the tasting from Village Wine &Spirits. From pinot noir, to Italian white wine, to prosecco, many different wines were represented. In addition, for those not yet old enough to participate in the tasting, O'Connell popped the cork on a bottle of sparkling apple cider.

Merchants that do not offer food and drink were a little more creative in their approach to drawing visitors in. Lisa Lynch of Ports and Company held a "fashion stroll." Dressed in fashions from her store and carrying a shopping bag with the Ports and Company logo, she walked around the Farmer's Market and the Village, modeling many different ensembles, changing outfits more than once during the evening.

O'Connell said having the celebration has enabled local businesses to enhance its relationship with the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce. "It's been really nice to build a relationship with the Chamber," she said. O'Connell added the Chamber has been very generous, as it donated roughly $600 for a sign to welcome visitors to the village during the nights of hospitality. O'Connell said the Chamber was very excited for the opportunity to become involved in an event that would help bring more awareness to the wonderful shops that exist in the Village. "They loved the idea and loved the concept," she said. "There's something for everyone."

"A Sampling of Village Hospitality," will be held every Thursday from 5-7 p.m. in Cohasset Village until early fall, and is free to the public.

450,000 people to Boston's Esplanade, July 4th, will perform a benefit concert marking the 50th anniversary of the South Shore Art Center at the South Shore Music Circus next Saturday. Boston POPSearch soloist winner and Taunton resident Tracy Silva will also be on hand to reprise her rendition of "Your Daddy's Son" from the Broadway musical Ragtime.

"We're absolutely thrilled and honored to launch our 50th anniversary celebration with an event like this," explains Monica McKenney of the South Shore Art Center. "This will be such an unusual experience for the audience. It will be wonderful to see the Pops in such an intimate setting."

And wonderful, too, to support a good cause.

"We decided that for our 50th Anniversary, we wanted to give something back to the cities and towns on the South Shore which have supported us over the years by expanding our art education outreach for children from pre-school to high school," says McKenney. "We will also be able to enhance our exhibition programs."

Conductor Keith Lockhart and the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra will perform at the South Shore Music Circus, Sohier Street, Cohasset, Saturday, July 31, at 7 p.m. in a concert to benefit the South Shore Art Center. Tickets may be purchased at the SSMC box office or by calling 617/931-2787. WHAT'S ALL THE NOISE ABOUT?

According to the federal government, noise-induced hearing loss is one of the most common occupational diseases and the second most self-reported occupational illness or injury. About ten million Americans have permanent hearing loss from loud noise, either from long-term exposure or such sudden bursts as explosions. An estimated thirty million people are thought to be exposed to hazardous levels of noise at work, such as mining, construction, manufacturing, and agriculture. Professional musicians are at risk for noise-induced hearing loss as well, which can severely compromise their ability to work. If you think that you might suffer from noise-induced hearing loss at work, take steps to evaluate and preserve the hearing you have left.

If it isn't possible to remove yourself from hearing hazards, consider hearing protectors. These can be either plugs that are inserted into the ears or muffs that are placed over the ears. Their job is to reduce the intensity of sounds reaching the ears to protect them from potentially damaging noise. Our job at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER is to use all our resources to assess, identify, and possibly prevent hearing impairment, as well as custom fit hearing instruments. For a free, painless hearing test, call us at 781-337-1144, 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth.

P.S. Noise-induced hearing loss can also stem from hobbies such as snowmobiling, recreational shooting and motorcycling.

Benatar first met Giraldo in 1979 when she recruited him to assemble a backing band for her debut album, In the Heat of the Night. The professional partnership soon became personal and they were married in 1982. Benatar and Giraldo welcomed their first daughter, Haley, in 1985, and second, Hana, in 1994.

They also continued working together on a series of top-selling albums that generated hits like "Heartbreaker," "Love is a Battlefield," "We Live For Love," and "Hit Me With Your Best Shot" and made Benatar one of the true female superstars of rock and roll. Now based in Maui, Hawaii, Benatar and Giraldo continue to write songs, record and tour and will be in concert at the South Shore Music Circus on Thursday. Benatar is the name people know, but the Brooklyn native doubts she would have done it all alone.

"It would have been very difficult to do all this without a partner both personally and professionally," explained Benatar by telephone last week from a Minnesota tour stop. "Musically, we're still in touch with each other. Neil and I still like to play together. At this stage of our careers, everything we do we do for fun. It's who's cooking dinner tonight that's the problem."

After a hiatus of several years following the birth of their second child, the couple now tour regularly — with children in tow. "These days it is almost like we're going camping when we go on the road, it's like rock and roll summer camp."

Their parents may be rock stars, but that hasn't stopped Haley and Hana from developing their own interests.

"My youngest daughter is very into sports, and my oldest has just come through her teen years. Between the ages of 14 and 17, forget it, Haley was only interested in her mother if I could get her 'N Sync tickets," Benatar says with a laugh.

(Pat Benatar and Neil Giraldo will be at the South Shore Music Circus, Sohier Street, Cohasset, Thursday, July 22, at 8 PM. For tickets, call 617/931-2787 or visit www.themusiccirus.org. Benatar and Giraldo will play the Cape Cod Melody Tent in Hyannis Friday, July 23. For tickets, call 1-800-347-0808 or visit www.melodytent.org.)

Renter meets with partying boys and their parents

Teenagers trash vacation house

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

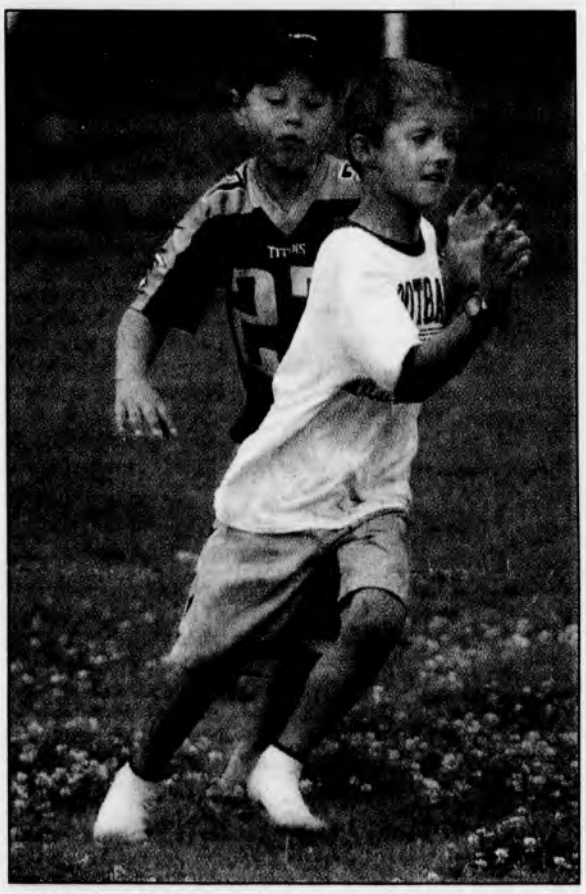
The volatile blend of kids and alcohol has resulted in a handful of local teenagers facing charges of breaking into a home over the weekend and damaging property there, including furniture and flooring, according to police.

"Anytime you put kids and alcohol together — it's never a good combination," Police Chief Jim Hussey said Tuesday. "It appears these individuals used this as their own private party house."

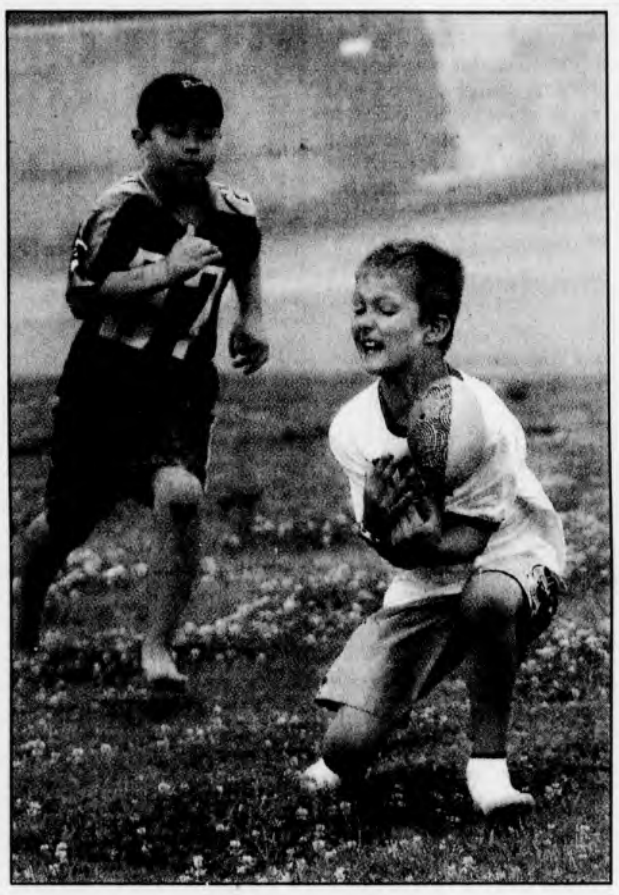
It's not the first time an unsupervised party has resulted in arrests and property damage. But what may be a first is the attitude of the alleged victim, who has rented the house for the summer and whose nine-year-old daughter is now afraid to go back.

Kristin Allison crossed paths with some of the boys' parents who went to pick their sons up at the police station where she had gone to write a statement. She asked they meet her at the house.

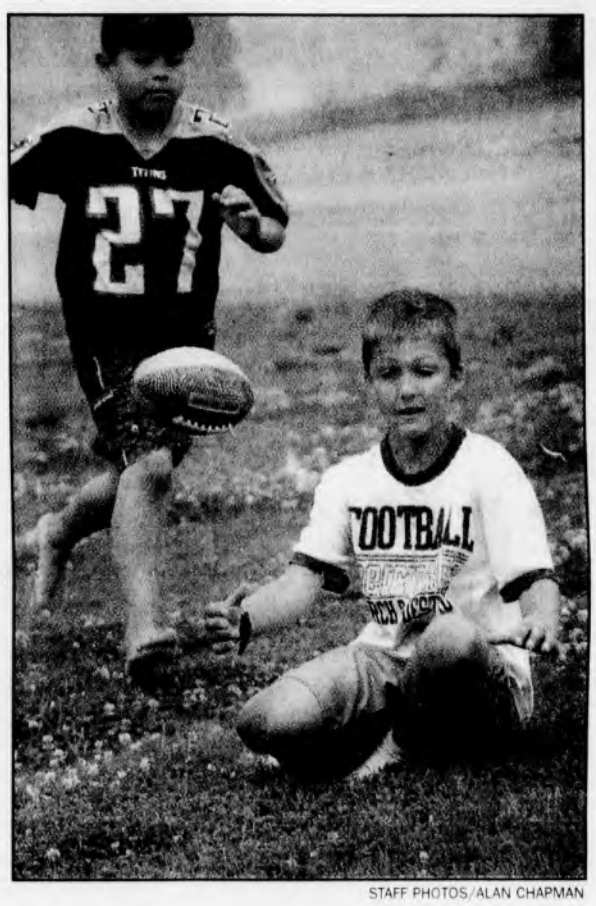
"Cohasset has a real problem with juveniles. The parents aren't part of a constructive solution – they often aren't good role models."
— Kristin Allison



"This way the parents see what happened," she said. "The boys confront the victim and understand what they've done, see how their actions affected other lives, and say a personal apology."



By way of background, Allison, who was away for the weekend, said when she arrived home about 6 p.m. Sunday, there were three boys with cups in their hands standing by two cars in the driveway. At first she wasn't alarmed because the house shares the driveway with another house. But when she asked what was up, the boys jumped in the cars and sped away. She then noticed two bicycles were missing and heard noises from inside the house, so she drove to her mother's house and called the police.



When the police arrived, Allison said there were five boys [one, 16 and four, 15-year-olds] in the house who all tried to run away, jumping off rocks and tumbling off cliffs. One even dove into the water and tried to swim away. Three were apprehended and arrested at that point. Two more boys were arrested later. There were more teens involved and police expect to make more arrests, Chief Hussey said. At some point, there may have been anywhere from 10-20 teens partying at the house which is off Atlantic Avenue.

Allison said the boys had "cases and cases of beer." The only alcohol her family kept in

Koed hits the campaign trail with fellow Democrat Kerry

Is party delegate at DNC in Boston

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Among the sea of delegates at the Democratic National Convention, Cohasset residents could still see a familiar face if they watch live coverage of the event from their living rooms.

Selectman Fred Koed, who is on local cable-TV during weekly selectmen's meetings, is one of roughly150 Massachusetts delegates attending the event that wraps up tonight (Thursday).

Koed has been very active in politics for more than 20 years. He said while he has attended many political conventions in the past, the DNC will be different because it is a national event.

Koed said while he has never worked with presidential hopeful Senator John Kerry for such a big race before, "I go back to 1982 with John," when he ran for lieutenant governor. In 1984, Kerry was elected to the United States Senate and is in his third term.

"I go back to 1982 with John."
— Selectman Fred Koed

Over the years, Koed said he has helped with every aspect of campaigning for Kerry, from giving him rides, to holding campaign signs and handing out bumper stickers. Koed said one year, he brought Kerry to the Heritage Days street fair in Scituate to introduce him to some of the people in attendance. Koed said for more than 20 years, he has helped make Kerry a household name from Weymouth all the way down to Cape Cod.

This time around, the goal is much larger, and Koed said he has helped Kerry campaign in New Hampshire, Maine, Massachusetts, and Minnesota. It's all about "meeting people, and building and cultivating relationships for the fall," Koed said.

Koed said he is really looking forward to two events during the convention — Kerry's speech, which will be broadcast tonight (Thursday), as well as the balloon drop. Koed said the speech Kerry will make will give him the opportunity to list all the goals he sees for the future, and Koed said hopefully, "People will listen with an open mind." Koed was in New York for the DNC in 1992 when then Governor Bill Clinton was nominated.

"When the balloons drop, it's an exciting rush of adrenaline," Koed said. "It's a climax for the whole event."

All Massachusetts delegates are staying at the Fairmont Copley Plaza, and between special events and convention itself, there is little free time. "It's long days and long nights. There's no way you can do anything else," Koed said.

Koed said the convention is well worth all the planning and potential inconvenience. "I've met some great people in this game of politics," he said.

WWII marine's memorial square spruced up

Norman Todd Park is lovingly restored

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The whites and pinks of flowering plants and trees used to provide a splash of color on every side of Norman Todd Park. Statues used to graced the garden, and the park used to be seen as a memorial fitting a World War II veteran. However, over the years a lack of maintenance enabled weeds to take root, crowding out the plantings of the past, and crowding out the pride felt by the town for one of its veterans.

Norman Todd Park, as seen today, serves once again as a memorial fitting a member of the "Greatest Generation."

But members of the Veteran's Memorial Committee couldn't sit idly by and watch a living memorial become overgrown and the sacrifice of a soldier forgotten, which is why they teamed up with the Cohasset DPW, Water Department, and the garden clubs to rejuvenate the park, which now

Questions clarified on school budget deficit

The school department has recently received end of the year bills which has put it in a tough financial situation, and there has been some question as to what those bills are, and how they will be paid for.

The $90,000 bill is a gas bill received from Keyspan, and the school department does not have enough money in the budget to cover that cost. In addition, a $22,000 bill for electricity was received, for which only $14,000 was budgeted. Supt. Denise Walsh said hopefully, the $8,000 difference can be covered by shifting money within the budget, and will not need to be paid by the town.

A $65,000 charge for unemployment costs also surfaced. Usually, the town pays the school's unemployment costs and is reimbursed at a later date. This year, the school did not charge itself for unemployment, and therefore did not pay the town back.

Both the $90,000 charge and the $65,000 charge will be paid from the municipal side of the budget. The $90,000 will come before voters at Town Meeting as an unpaid bill. It will take an eight-tenths majority vote to allocate funds to pay the bill. The costs for unemployment charges will be included as an appropriation deficit, and will also need a Town Meeting vote.

MBTA ombudsman contract discussed

At the direction of the Board of Selectmen, Town Manager Michael Buckley made a phone call to the Waterfield Design Group to ask whether it would agree to allow the town to terminate the contract it has with the company for an ombudsman. Buckley said Waterfield Principal Craig Miller is currently in Africa, and will not be returning to the country for another two to three weeks, but that he spoke with Miller briefly and a meeting will be scheduled when he returns. The ombudsman contract is slated to run out in October.

KoKo Island changes still being discussed

Potential developers are still trying to work with the planning board, to try to mitigate the effects a drive-up window would have should plans move forward to renovate and conjoin KoKo Island and Hair Affair, turning the former into a family-style restaurant and the latter into a donut shop.

Members of the planning board said if the plans had only included changes to the restaurant, and not the addition of a drive-up window, there wouldn't be the need for as much discussion. However, abutters to the site, as well as the planning board itself, are concerned about the potential impact on traffic, noise and air pollution cars in queue could cause.

Planning board member Peter Pratt said Michael Tack, a representative for the Nauset Group, which is looking to renovate the site, said at the board's July 7 meeting, the plans for the site were drawn under the assumption that the Dunkin' Donuts currently located in Cohasset Plaza will move from its current location to the 3A site, and the deal won't move forward without the drive-up window. Pratt said developers are going to do some research to find out what traffic is typically like for Dunkin' Donuts shops all over Massachusetts, and bring that information back to the planning board.

The KoKo Island discussion is tentatively on the Aug. 4 planning board agenda. In the event the Nauset Group cannot compile all the information it would like, it will be rescheduling to another date. Please call the planning board office at (781) 383-3517 prior to the meeting for updates.

DiNero's changes on planning board agenda

Members of the DiNero's development team are slated to come before the planning board to present a formal site plan for the board's review. During a previous informal discussion with the board, developers expressed interest in expanding their current operation, and presented a very preliminary set of plans.

Current owners have been looking for a way to better accommodate guests, and would like to add roughly 700 square feet to the restaurant. With the addition of a new function room, space will be freed up in the main dining room, tables will be more spread out, and patrons will be able to sit more comfortably at their tables. In addition, the function room will increase the variety of services the restaurant can provide, as it will enable DiNero's to host small functions and gatherings without having to close the entire restaurant to the public.

Currently there are 70 seats at DiNero's, and that number would be increased to roughly 93 with the new expansion. The new function room will have ample windows looking out over stone ledge, and can be used for a variety of private parties. Sliding dividers will be installed to set the private functions apart. Two new restrooms will be constructed near the new addition, and the current restrooms will remain where they are.

Parking will be reconfigured to aid the flow of traffic as well. Currently, there are 27 spaces striped for parking, but they are more narrow than what the town requires, and many times patrons do not fill every space for fear of having someone else open their car door and bump into them. New spaces will comply with the width and length criteria of the town, and will be configured differently in the lot to help prevent crowding and help enable the flow of traffic, as well as keep patrons from having to back out into the street. The new configuration will have 37 total spaces, of which two are set aside for the apartment located above the restaurant, which is four more than the restaurant is required to have.

A formal site plan, which will be more definitive and will most likely accommodate some of the suggestions made by the planning board during the informal discussion, will be presented to the board Wednesday, Aug. 4.

Boaters must pick up their mooring stickers

All boat owners with a mooring should pick up their mooring sticker ASAP. Harbormaster John Muncey said under harbor rules and regulations, anyone without a sticker could be subject to a $25 fine.

Although the fees will not be imposed this year, "we want the stickers on the boats," Muncey said. He added he regularly goes around checking to make sure boat owners have paid their user fees, and "if they don't have a sticker, we figure they haven't paid." Muncey said stickers can be picked up at the Harbormaster's office from 7 a.m. until noon, and 1 p.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday, from 9 a.m. until midnight on Saturday, and from 9 a.m. until 6 p.m. on Sunday.

Chairman Sullivan sought sewer hookup

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan does own a piece of property for which he has filed sewer applications twice. According to Sewer Commission Office Manager Tara Tradd, the property, located behind Sullivan's home address of 84 Elm St., abuts the central sewer district. She said applications for sewer, filed on Aug. 25, 2003 and March 10, 2004 were both denied, but may be reconsidered if capacity becomes available.

Facilities manager search under way

Scott Collins, chairman of the School Building Facilities Committee, soon to be known as the Building Facilities Committee, said currently, an advertisement is being drafted to hire someone who can serve as facilities manager for all the buildings in town. The person hired will report directly to the Town Manager, and will have three employees under his or her charge from the Department of Public Works who will be dedicated to building maintenance.

The person who is hired will have a management role, but some hands-on work will be required. He or she will be responsible for coordinating contracted service for the HVAC systems as well as sprinklers, fire alarms, and any other systems that need attention from an outside contractor.

The candidate should have a fair amount of engineering experience, to be able to provide support to the town, as well as a technical background, to understand the various computer systems that regulate utilities at the various buildings.

The person will need to essentially create the building maintenance department for the town, and the position will be full-time. The position was originally approved at Town Meeting as a part-time position, but the Board of Selectmen feel the position needs to be full-time. The position will most likely be salaried at between $50,000 and $70,000 per year.

The position will be advertised once the job description is drafted and approved.

Committee raises money to save teaching positions

School board accepts funds

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Thanks to the work of a group of concerned parents, two elementary-level teaching positions will be saved this fall. The school committee has gladly accepted a donation of roughly $65,000, which will replace some of the money cut from the fiscal year 2005 budget.

The Committee to Save Three Teachers, headed up by North Main Street resident Barbara Buckley, has been working with the Cohasset Education Foundation since April to raise the money needed to retain three elementary teaching positions the budget could no longer support. The Cohasset Education Foundation is a non-profit organization made up of concerned residents who raise funds for various educational expenses. The Foundation has typically given funds for tangible items, such as when money was given for a new computer lab. But this is the first time money has been used to retain positions in the schools. The cuts did not involve layoffs because the positions were being vacated by three retiring elementary school teachers.

Buckley came before the school committee on July 19. She said at that point, $64,721 was sitting in the Cohasset Education Foundation account. Buckley said there was $668 outstanding, which when collected would bring the grand total to $65,389. "I'll write the check for the $668 if it doesn't come in," she said.

The money raised is enough to cover two of the three positions Buckley's group hoped to save. She said the deadline has been extended to allow time for more donations, to at least be able to cover the roughly $4,000 necessary to completely cover two positions. The typical entry-level teacher's salary is $35,000 in Cohasset, and the school committee voted to use the funds raised to replace one second-grade teacher and one third-grade teacher. The vote is significant because the school department's fiscal year 2004 budget finished in the red, raising speculation the schools could tap money from this year's budget to cover the deficit.

But the $90,000 Keyspan gas bill and $65,000 in unemployment costs [which have been paid by the town and should have been reimbursed by the schools] will go to the fall special Town Meeting and won't come out of the school's fiscal year 2005 budget.

Although the town passed a $400,000 Prop. 2-1/2 override for the schools at the ballot box in April, the money wasn't enough to prevent a reduction in teaching positions. Prop. 2-1/2 is the state law that caps the amount a municipality can raise its tax levy from year to year.

Buckley, who began the fundraising campaign before the override passed, said 1,000 families in Cohasset contributing $105 to the cause were needed to raise the $105,000 for three entry-level teacher salaries for one year. She was concerned about increasing class sizes if teaching positions at the elementary level were cut. "We have certainly had some families who were extremely generous," she said, adding while some gave rather large checks, the majority of funds received were checks from families that donated $105 each.

Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh said teacher contracts specify that for grades kindergarten through three, class size can be no larger than 23, and in grades four to six, students cap off at 26. However, all class sizes are subject to budget restrictions, which prevents the filing of grievances should the numbers increase. By keeping one teacher on in the second grade and another in the third, class sizes should drop from an average estimated 23.6 down to 19.7 students per class in grade two, and from 23.4 down to 19.5 students in grade three.

Roy Fitzsimmons, 116 Doane St., asked whether it was definite the money to cover benefits for the teachers would be available in the town's budget. Walsh said acting Town Manager Michael Buckley confirmed the money was available. She explained the money for benefits had been budgeted for the three teachers before the town knew they wouldn't be returning.

Buckley acknowledged while many in town have been extremely supportive of her committee's efforts, there were also some families that may have agreed with the mission of the group, but not the means. "There certainly have been people who for many good reasons didn't want to participate or thought this wasn't the right way to go about it," said Buckley. However, in the end Buckley said, "The 10 committee members were not alone in wanting to get the teachers back."

For more information, please call Barbara Buckley (before 9 p.m.) at (781) 383-8261. Donations will only be accepted for the next couple of weeks, and residents are urged to make donations as soon as possible. Checks should be made out to the Cohasset Education Foundation and can be sent to Buckley's home address at 272 North Main St.

Search for new Town Manager starts

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The Board of Selectmen is eager to begin the search for a new Town Manager, and the first stage of the process has been completed. With the Town Manager Act Review Committee discussions coming to a close, the next major focus will be on selecting a new Town Manager for the town.

Selectmen were slated to select members for the Town Manager Search Committee yesterday (Wednesday) after the Mariner went to press. Town Manager Michael Buckley, who took over the position when former Town Manager Mark Haddad abruptly resigned May 5, said the committee will most likely be made up of between 12 to 15 members. Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said he would like to see members of town boards such as the school committee, advisory committee, past selectmen, as well as people who have a general knowledge of the town appointed to the committee. Buckley said he could not release the names of the potential committee members prior to last night's meeting.

The committee will be involved with drafting an advertisement for the position, as well as interviewing potential candidates. Town Manager Michael Buckley said he thinks the committee will narrow down the field of candidates to between three to five finalists to be interviewed by selectmen.

Buckley said with a position such as this, the town will probably receive between 50 and 80 applications. It will be the committee's job to sift through those applications to find candidates who mesh well with the what the town is looking for in a new Town Manager Sullivan said he's hopeful someone with a successful career in municipal management that has a proven track record of managing a town or departments within a municipal environment will come forward. Someone who is has the key skills of being good with finances, good with people, good with solving problems, and good with strategic planning would be ideal.

Buckley said it will probably take between two to three weeks to draft an advertisement and have it placed in various publications. The advertisements will have to take into consideration various publication deadlines. From there, Buckley estimates it will take roughly two months for the committee to conduct interviews, which will bring the process into mid-October. Once candidates are narrowed down, it will take another two or three weeks for selectmen to conduct interviews, but if all goes well, Buckley is optimistic a new Town Manager can be selected by Nov. 1.

"It's tight," said Sullivan, but added he thinks the town will be able to find the right candidate in that timeframe.

ZBA: pet hotel can't have overnight guests

May start as daycare facility

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Due to restrictions on kennels in the town bylaw, a businessman who wants to open up a posh dog and cat hotel in part of the former automobile dealership building off Route 3A may start without keeping the pets overnight.

Arthur S. Logan, a Weymouth resident, had hoped to open an upscale daycare center and kennel for cats and dogs, dubbed Bark Avenue, in part of the vacant Chevy dealership building near the Cohasset-Scituate line.

This past spring, Logan applied for a special permit for a change of use from the Cohasset Zoning Board of Appeals which subsequently denied his application because the ZBA said the building didn't meet the setback requirements for kennels in the town bylaw.

He is appealing the ZBA decision to Superior Court.

In the meantime, Logan is contemplating operating a pet daycare and retail business at the site that would cater to cats and dogs offering grooming, pet supplies and professional photography but wouldn't keep any cats or dogs overnight. The proposed facility would still include a fenced-in, outdoor exercise area.

"This business will be strictly a day facility," Logan's attorney, Allan H. Tufankjian wrote in a July 1 letter to Building Commissioner Robert Egan. The hours of operation would be 6:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m., Monday through Saturday.

The pet daycare will be on the Scituate side of the former showroom and will use about 5,000 square feet of the building. The site is zoned highway business.

The zoning bylaw regarding kennels requires minimum setbacks of 200 feet from all lot lines. The zoning board noted the property where the former dealership is located consists of five separate lots and determined the structure did not meet that requirement.

But Tufankjian, Logan's attorney, notes in the appeal that the five lots are owned by one entity, Chief Justice Cushing Highway Corporation, which would lease him the area for the pet hotel. He said Logan's proposed kennel is at least 200 feet from outside boundary of the CJCH Corporation property.

The ZBA said if the owner merged all the lots, then the special permit for the kennel would be granted. But Tufankjian said that wasn't necessary.

The zoning bylaw regarding kennels requires minimum setbacks of 200 feet from all lot lines

In a telephone interview he explained the ZBA was concerned that a lot could be sold off to a third party therefore reducing the setback. But Tufankjian said his client is amenable to a condition that revokes the special permit if that were to occur.

In the meantime, Egan gave Logan the go-ahead for the pet daycare facility. In a letter to Tufankjian, he explained that although "kennel" is not defined in the zoning bylaw, the distinction between that and an animal day care is the property will not be used for breeding or boarding of dogs.

"As such, the 200-foot setback required for kennels does not apply in this case," Egan wrote. "All other facets of the proposed operation are consistent with allowed uses in the highway business district (and would not need ZBA approval)."

Egan said his decision is subject to appeal by the zoning board of appeals.

ZBA chairman Woody Chittick said the board may discuss the plans for the dog daycare at its meeting Tuesday.

During the zoning board public hearing on the application for the special permit in May, Walter Sullivan, attorney for Ledgewood Estates — a residential development behind the site – said noise and odor would be detrimental to the neighborhood.

It's unclear if the neighbors will object to the daycare, grooming facility. Ledgewood Estates which straddles the Scituate-Cohasset line is located much farther away than the 200-foot requirement. The former dealership site is bordered on both sides by commercial property including a new tennis club.

Logan's business will have some Cohasset competition. Barkley's Dog Spa and Boutique that has pet supplies and will offer pet grooming services recently opened at the other end of town in Jonathan Livingston Seagull Plaza off 3A.

In a telephone interview, Logan said he hasn't given up on the pet hotel concept, which he says there is a need for in the community.

Logan got the idea for the business from his nephew Frank Charles, who is the mayor of St. Augustine, Fla. and an entrepreneur with a chain of successful "Pet Paradise Resort and Day Spas" in the sunshine state. Pet Paradise resorts' motto is "While you're away, your pet will play."

Renter meets with partying boys and their parents

the house was a bottle of champagne in the refrigerator for her and her husband's anniversary. The boys also drank the champagne. They disabled the smoke detectors, cooked food and threw it everywhere.

She said the boys rifled through drawers and went through her clothing including nightgowns and hats.

"It was an unbelievable mess," she said, adding she thought the party had gone on for a couple of days. Her family had been away from the house for 48 hours.

"This was not just a party house," Allison said. "This was arrogant malicious destruction of property. They had no regard for someone's personal belongings."

The five local teens, who were arrested, were set to be arraigned in juvenile court at Quincy District Court yesterday (Wednesday) on charges of breaking and entering; malicious destruction of property valued over $250; and minors in possession of alcohol. One of the boys is also charged with resisting arrest.

Police have not charged anyone with theft of the bicycles, which is still under investigation, Hussey said.

Police have not released the names of the alleged perpetrators because they are juveniles, which means they are under 17 years of age. Court proceedings for juveniles are not open to the public.

But the real story, according to Allison isn't what punishment the court metes out but how to hold the teens and their families accountable for this kind of behavior, which, she feels is all too prevalent in affluent communities.

"Cohasset has a real problem with juveniles," said Allison, who grew up in town. "The parents aren't part of a constructive solution – they often aren't good role models."

Allison said she didn't invent the idea of meeting the youthful perpetrators and their parents. She is part of a group, dubbed Restorative Justice, whose program has been formalized as a way the community and police deal with juvenile offenders in her hometown of Concord.

She said the boys have agreed to come back and do some repair work on the property that isn't related to the party because the place needs to be professionally cleaned and the damage to doors and screens fixed by someone who knows what they are doing.

Allison extends an open invitation to any of the other boys at the party and their parents to come and talk to her.

She said the attitude of the parents she talked with ranged from being honest and straightforward to defensive and rude to her. She said one parent, through another, asked if he could pay for the damage but did not want his son's name revealed to the police.

"I said, 'I won't do that and what a horrible message to send to a child,'" Allison said. "Some parents will do everything in their power to keep their child from being caught."

The homeowner, who asked that her name and the address not be used because she is worried her house will be targeted by teens, described the youths as "brazen." Her grandfather built the house back in 1927 and she grew up spending summers there. "I love the place and I feel really sad that this has happened," she said. "There was a sense of freedom in such a place and this has changed everything.

"Now you have to worry when you leave your house whose going to be there when you return even if you're just taking a trip to the grocery store," she said.

Christy Tarantino and Lisa Matos were the police officers who responded to the scene.

Chief Hussey said those taken into custody showed signs they had consumed alcohol. He said police do not know where the teenagers obtained the alcohol, which was confiscated at the scene. Police also confiscated a digital camera that they believe the teens were using.

Hussey said he was not sure if some of the teenagers got to the house by boat. He said the matter is still under investigation and police are trying to identify the others involved.

Partying teens damaging property is nothing new in Cohasset. Last December, the Snowdales of Mill Lane wrote to the Mariner disheartened that inebriated football players and their friends would come into their home, throw up and urinate there, ruining rugs and soiling brand new jackets.

They thought about calling parents but weren't certain who was involved or if the parents would turn their anger towards them.

reflects the beauty of the original garden, which was first dedicated in 1948.

Norman Todd, who died in 1947 after being exposed to radiation during World War II, is one of eight Cohasset Veterans who have been memorialized with squares in town.

Located at the intersection of Beechwood Street and Norman Todd Road, Norman Todd Park was given to the residents of Cohasset as a gift from the Todd Family, in memory of their son, Norman MacIntosh Todd. Known by his family and friends as "Mac," Norman Todd was a Marine Lieutenant who died from radiation exposure during World War II.

Growing up, Todd spent his summers living at 354 Jerusalem Road, also known as "Greystone Lodge." During the winter, the Todd family lived at the Copley Plaza Hotel in Boston where they had four rooms on the third floor. Todd's father Albert, who was an avid golfer and played every Sunday morning at the Cohasset Golf Club, was the president of United Shoe Machinery Company in Boston. The company was founded by George Brown of Beverly, who was married to Albert Todd's sister.

While attending Cornell University, Norman Todd met his future wife Mary Jo in 1942. Todd graduated from Cornell the following year, and was commissioned as a Marine Lieutenant in 1944. In October 1944 he married Mary Jo, and seven months later in May of 1945, he was deployed to the Pacific Theater.

Todd's was among the first United States Marine units to enter the Japanese city of Nagasaki after the atomic bomb was dropped on August 9, 1945. Like many Marines, he became sick from radiation exposure, and was sent to a hospital in California. His family was not given any information about his ailment, and was not told when Todd would be able to return to Cohasset.

Many Cohasset residents do not remember the days when Norman Todd Park was in pristine condition.

When Todd did return to his hometown, his family was told there was no cure for his illness. Albert Todd, spared no expense on medical exams and treatments for his son. During Norman's illness, the Todd family's nanny Dee Dee Granville cared for Norman. On August 7, 1947, two years after being exposed to the radiation, Norman passed away at his Cohasset home at 119 North Main St., with his wife Mary Jo by his side. He was only 25 years old.

Mary Jo Todd was one of the driving forces behind the rejuvenation of her late husband's memorial park.

Many Cohasset residents do not remember the days when Norman Todd Park was in pristine condition. For years, local resident Ralph Enos was paid $1.67 per hour by the town to take care of the park. During the years after Enos retired, the park was not maintained and became just another public place with overgrown grass and shrubs. In 2000, Mary Jo and her daughter came to see the park and were both disappointed and surprised to see its condition. Mary Jo in turn sent photos of the original plantings to the Veteran's Memorial Committee, and its members promised her the park would be restored to its original beauty.

The committee requested funding at the fall Special Town Meeting in 2003, and the article passed. With the help of landscape designer and architect Ginny Norman, a planting plan was developed based on the original photographs. Irrigation sprinklers were installed, plants were added to the landscape, and a new memorial plaque was cast for the park, replacing the original plaque that was lost over time.

Chairman of the Veterans Memorial Committee Glenn Pratt provided the Mariner with the information for this article. For more information on Norman "Mac" Todd or any of the Cohasset veterans who have paid the ultimate price in the name of freedom, please visit the Cohasset Veterans Memorial Committee Web site at www.cohassetveteransmemorial.com.

Squares named after fallen servicemen

Norman Todd is one of many veterans who have been honored by the town of Cohasset. The town lost seven other men during World War II, who have all been memorialized with squares in town including:

- Allen A. Buffum: Beechwood St. & So. Main Street
- Robert E. Jason: Road at the Common
- William B. Long: Road at the Common
- Howard R. Gleason: Road to Yacht Club from Margin St.
- Perry H. Johnson: Beach St. & Atlantic Ave.
- David H. Parker: King St. & Beechwood St.
- Everett F. Studley: Jerusalem Rd. & Hull St. West's Corner

The mothers of the eight servicemen that gave their lives are memorialized at the Gold Star Mothers Monument at Woodside Cemetery.

Roughly 498 men and women from Cohasset served during World War II from 1941 until the war was declared over in December 1946. Cohasset has memorialized all of its service men and women from the "Greatest Generation" by listing all of their names at Veterans Park at Cohasset Harbor. A book of Cohasset servicemen's names was presented to the National Monuments Commission at the dedication of the WWII Memorial, on May 29, 2004 in Washington, D.C.

KIDS CABARET ON STAGE

Cohasset is well represented in this year's Hingham-based Kids Cabaret production of Rogers & Hammerstein's "South Pacific". Shining brightly in this South Seas tale of wartime romance is Wis Murrary as Lt. Cable. Joining Wis in the chorus are Katie Baker, Leigh Collins, Madeline Curley, Michaela Conners, Abby Faulkner, Olivia Franklin, Thomson and Whitney Jaffe, Lesen Haracz, Polly Murrary, and Zoe Whilton.

The curtain goes up on the all-student performed and led show Thursday, July 29 at 8 p.m. in the Hingham High School auditorium on Union Street. Additional performances are set for Friday, July 20 and Saturday, July 31 also at 8 p.m. Tickets are $8 for adults, $5 for seniors and students and available at the door. This will be a fantastic show and a great way to enjoy an evening with your family.

ALL-KID PRODUCTION

Don't miss the Cohasset Dramatic Club's All-Kid production of "Charlie and the Chocolate Factory" on Friday, Aug. 6, at 10 a.m. and 7:30 p.m., and Saturday, Aug. 7, at 1 and 7:30 p.m. at Cohasset Town Hall.

Follow Charlie and the other Golden Ticket winners as they tour the famed chocolate factory of Willy Wonka. Meet Augustus Gloop, Violet Beauregarde, Veruca Salt and Mike TeeVee, as well as the small but wise Oompa-Loompahs. Tickets are just $10 and can be purchased at Front Street Book Shop in Scituate, Buttonwood Books in Cohasset, by phone at 781-544-0304, or at the door. Charlie and the Chocolate Factory is produced in conjunction with the Cohasset Recreation Department.

BUSINESSES THANKED

The Cohasset Swim & Dive Team would like to thank all who supported this years team fundraiser. Especially those businesses that donated so generously: The Good Sport Inc.; Goodwin Graphics; Shoe Market Kids; Hypertone Personal Fitness Training. Your continued support of our team is greatly appreciated.

BOSTON BENEFIT

Andrew and Kristen Astley, Susan and Joe Carrabes and Emily Brown of Cohasset had a chance to revisit their youth at "Camp Bonfire," a benefit held at Todd English's Bonfire restaurant at the Boston Park Plaza Hotel & Towers with proceeds going to the Boys and Girls Clubs of Boston. The event raised $30,000 dollars which will send 300 kids to camp. Amazing to hear about. Those kids are very happy I am sure.

Make sure to send in all of your news and event information to me no later than Mondays by 5 p.m..!

Koed knows Kerry

During the last election, Koed served as an Elector for the State Democratic party, and was one of 12 members of the state's Electoral College to cast a vote for Albert K. Gore Jr. As secretary, he oversaw the counting of the ballots both in Massachusetts and in Florida, where he spent three weeks inspecting the "hanging chads" when he served as the Palm Beach County Democratic Party's head clerk during that county's recount.

According to the DNC Web site, the convention brings together "4,353 delegates and 611 alternates, representing each of the 50 states, the District of Colombia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, American Samoa, Guam, the Virgin Islands, and Democrats Abroad." There are also 15,000 members of the media and 15,000 other guests including elected officials and foreign dignitaries, for a grand total of roughly 35,000 attendees. The convention, which began July 26 and ends July 29, is being held at the Fleet Center in Boston. The Republican National Convention will be held at Madison Square Garden in New York City from Aug. 30-Sept. 2.

Sewer among options explored for Cook Estate plan

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

While developers say it is a last resort, municipal sewer for the proposed Cook Estate senior housing project has not been ruled out as a possible wastewater solution.

Jack Dawley, one of the principals of Northland Residential — the development company the town is working with to build on the Cook property off Sohier Street — told selectmen if all else fails, municipal sewer would be pursued. He said he would look for the support of the various town boards that were instrumental in getting the project to where it is today, including the Senior Housing Selection Committee and the Board of Selectmen.

In order to be able to tie in to the town's wastewater treatment plant, the issue would have to come before Town Meeting, as the property lies outside the Central Sewer District, the only area allowed to be considered for hookups. Dawley said if the issue needs a town vote, it would have to happen at this fall's Special Town Meeting.

"Clearly from the outset, the RFP (request for proposals) said municipal sewer was not an option," said Dawley, adding his company began the project with the assumption an on-site system was a requirement. However, when the results of soil tests indicated the kind of on-site system required to sustain the development would not be an option, other means of disposal had to be looked into.

A groundwater discharge permit, issued by the state Department of Environmental Protection, is required for every development that would discharge more than 10,000 gallons of wastewater per day. It is estimated the Cook project would discharge roughly 15,000 gallons per day. Without the proper soils, the permit cannot be obtained and the development cannot move forward.

"We have searched under every rock, and only found worms," Dawley said. To date, a wastewater discharge solution has not been found.

The RFP was sent out to potential bidders for the project and stated the town "has assumed that town sewer will not be available for all or even some of the units." In light of that, now that it looks as if sewer could be an option, it has been questioned whether the entire bidding process needs to begin all over again to level the playing field. Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said Town Counsel told him that would not be the case, but that at any time the town could decide to reject all proposals and start again, which Sullivan said is an option with every development.

Dawley said soils at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, South Shore Music Circus, Deer Hill School, and land to the West of Sohier Street are just some of the options that have been looked into to serve as an off-site leaching field for the Cook property. Only the library soils would have any chance of supporting the kind of system the project will need, he said.

However, that plan is not without its drawbacks, as a pipe would need to be installed down Sohier Street to carry wastewater from the Cook property to the library. The pipe would cost roughly $750,000 to install, and would require tearing up one of the main roads in Cohasset. In addition, the library property sits very close to two major well fields in town, which is an environmental concern, and the pipes would have to cross the Greenbush tracks. Dawley said there are a few more pieces of land he plans to look at which could potentially serve as an off-site leaching field.

Dawley said he has also been having discussions with Avalon developers, who are looking to build a 200-unit apartment complex off Route 3A. It is rumored that Avalon is looking to take advantage of the capacity at Hull's wastewater treatment plant.

There are legal questions which go along with the wastewater problems the Cook property has been facing. If the town allows the development to pursue connecting an off-site leaching field to the property, it will have to grant a street opening permit to allow the pipes to be installed for the length of Sohier Street. The Jerusalem Road Estates development was denied a street opening permit after it was given permission to use some of Hull's wastewater capacity. Developers could potentially file a suit against the town if the Cook project is granted the permit.

"We have searched under every rock, and only found worms."
— Jack Dawley, Northland Residential

In addition, if the project pursues and is granted a sewer connection, the Avalon and Cedarmere developments which were both told they could not tie in, could also potentially file a suit against the town. Avalon, a 40B project which was given Zoning Board approval for a comprehensive permit, was told from the beginning that capacity did not exist and a sewer connection would not be feasible. The development then went forward seeking alternate wastewater disposal venues, but never filed a sewer application.

Cedarmere, the 105-unit senior housing project slated to be built off of Beechwood Street, was also told there is no capacity, but still filed a sewer application with the sewer commission and was denied. That decision is being appealed by developers, who say capacity cannot be reserved.

Northland also filed a sewer application this April, and was denied. Dawley said they filed only to cover their bases. Dawley said he has no intention of appealing that decision. "I view appeals as confrontational events," he said. Dawley said from what he has heard, the Cook project has widespread town support, and "to enter into a litigious process is not the way to go."

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said whatever solution is found for the Cook property, it will take other areas where the sewer is an issue into consideration.

"Everyone knows there's a Little Harbor commitment. This project would have no affect on that," said Sullivan.

He said what the project will have to do is take a look at the existing 300,000 gallons of capacity, not the future capacity which will be set aside for Little Harbor once the town has the money to upgrade the plant. He suggested if the developer can potentially fix the infiltration and inflow problems for the town, which is causing water to seep into the pipes and increases the volume of flow to the plant, there is the potential the Cook Estate could tie into the sewer and would be a no-impact connection.

But that is the exact same proposal Cedarmere offered up to the Sewer Commission last summer and was denied. Sullivan said a joint venture to hook up the Cook property as well as other housing projects may be considered.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer asked whether the Cook project could be scaled back, so that it could discharge less than 10,000 gallons per day, and a Title 5 system could be installed. But Dawley said even if the project went to Title 5 systems, that would not ensure the system would be sound. "We would most likely build a system susceptible to failure," said Dawley, because of the soils on site. However, Dawley said one additional option for wastewater would be possibly breaking up the leaching fields to have two on site in different locations. If they were spread out, the project might be able to accommodate its own wastewater.

Dawley said he hopes to have a more definite picture of what the wastewater situation for the Cook property will be within the next 60 to 90 days.

Plans taking shape for Cook land

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Developers say they have hit a few bumps in the road, but are moving their vision forward for the creation of the Villages at Deer Hill on the Cook Estate.

The plans have remained virtually the same since March, when selectmen voted unanimously in favor of allowing the Northland Residential Corporation to build its proposed senior housing project on combined parcels of town owned and Cook Estate property. The project currently features 58 townhouse-style attached condominium residences and 37 rental apartments. Of the rental units, 28 will be affordable one-bedroom units, and nine will be market rate two-bedroom rentals.

Northland's original Request For Proposal response featured 60 townhouses spread throughout four duplex buildings, 12 triplex, and four quads. The rental apartment buildings, one with 18 units and one with 17, would have totaled 35 mixed-income rental apartments. According to Dave Fulton of GLC Consulting Services, who has worked with the town and Northland on the project, the changes took place as a result of a letter sent to Northland by the Senior Housing Selection Committee, asking that plans include 12 more market-rate rentals. With the changes to the housing options, affordable units have been decreased by two, but four more market-rate rentals are offered, for a total of nine.

Northland will file plans for its affordable housing under the town's Senior Multi-family Residence Overlay District bylaw, just as the Cedarmere development did. Cedarmere, a proposed 105-unit senior housing development slated to be built off of Beechwood Street, was the first development to file under the town's bylaw. Under the bylaw, affordability guidelines have been set, and at least 25 percent of dwelling units must be affordable to residents who qualify at low- or moderate-income standards.

Cohasset's bylaw defines "low" income the same way the Department of Housing and Community Development defines "very low" income, at 50 percent the area median income. In Cohasset, 50 percent is roughly $33,000 a year. Cohasset defines "moderate" income as between 50 percent and 80 percent the area median income, which the DHCD defines as "low" income. In Cohasset, that number is between $33,000 and $53,000 a year.

With plans as they currently stand, eight of the 28 affordable units will be offered to those who earn 50 percent of the AMI, and 20 will be offered for those at 80 percent AMI. All affordable units, whether at 50 or 80 percent, will count toward Cohasset's meeting the 10 percent affordable housing threshold set by the state.

Fulton said the concern around town has been that some residents will not qualify for the affordable units. Because many seniors living in Cohasset would make too much money to qualify for affordable housing should they sell the family home, many seniors find themselves house rich and cash poor. However, by offering more housing at the 80 percent level, it opens the doors for

Restorative justice

It's not easy for children and teenagers to face up and accept responsibility for illegal behavior. And sometimes it's even harder for their parents to accept the fact their kids messed up.

There's a lot of pressure today to make the sports team or be accepted to the National Honor Society. These activities look good on college résumés and for many parents having their son or daughter accepted by a top college is paramount. Having that record marred by a run-in with the police isn't a welcome thought because it could affect their child's chances of getting into their dream school.

But somewhere along the line some parents – especially in affluent communities – have lost sight of simple truths and commonsense. Not only are they letting their children down by condoning underage drinking and illegal drug use, but when their children get in trouble and they try to push it under the rug, they're sending the wrong message.

Over the weekend here in Cohasset, a number of juvenile boys (meaning they were all under 17) broke into a house, where they got drunk and trashed the place. The family that was renting the home was away for the weekend.

The boys brought along "cases and cases of beer" and the only alcohol the couple had in the house was a bottle of champagne in the refrigerator for their anniversary. Yes, the boys drank that too.

The teens also exhibited an arrogant disregard for the personal property of others. They rifled through drawers and threw food around, turning the place into a complete mess.

Unfortunately, underage and unsupervised partying is fairly common around here. It's viewed in some circles as a rite of passage for the young. After all, some say, they're just kids getting into mischief and teenagers are going to drink and experiment with drugs and there's nothing adults can do about it.

The boys, who broke into the Cohasset house this weekend, had no way of knowing the tenant there was part of a program in her hometown of Concord, called Restorative Justice.

According to the Centre for Restorative Justice, the program represents the "simple wisdom of viewing conflict as an opportunity for a community to learn and grow. It operates on the premise that conflict, including criminal conflict, inflicts harm, and therefore individuals must accept responsibility in repairing that harm."

The woman asked the boys and their parents to come to the house and see the mess that included damage to furniture, doors and flooring. She wanted the families to see the impact of what occurred and the effect on the victim.

The woman and her family were looking forward to their Cohasset vacation and now her nine-year-old daughter is afraid to return to the house.

Not all the parents were thrilled about her invitation to meet and she says some were defensive and rude. But as a result of the meetings, the boys are going to return to the house to do some work on the grounds. Unfortunately they created such a mess that professional cleaners need to be hired. She also asked the boys to apologize for their behavior.

The boys still had their day in court where they faced several criminal charges. But hopefully by meeting the victim and seeing the impact their irresponsible behavior had on that family, they may have learned an important lesson.

According to various Web sites on Restorative Justice, victims, communities, and offenders are placed in active roles to work together to:

- Empower victims in their search for closure
- Impress upon offenders the real human impact of their behavior
- Promote restitution to victims and communities

We urge Cohasset to look into Restorative Justice programs like the one in Concord. While we are saddened that this woman's family was victimized by events over the weekend – we're glad she has taken upon herself to teach us a lesson in handling young offenders.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Is it a $90K bill or is it $180K?

TO THE EDITOR:

I am more than slightly confused and very concerned. While watching a Selectmen's meeting on July 13, school committee member, Rick Shea, made a presentation about a "lost" utility bill which was reported on page three of the July 15 Mariner. This electric bill in the amount of $90K was described as an actual rather than an estimated one for the months ending in April. It was difficult for the home viewer to clearly hear Mr. Shea's comments; his microphone appeared to be malfunctioning. When questioned about the bills for the rest of the fiscal year that ended June 30, he had no information since he hadn't seen them.

It appears that this is just another year that the school committee has grossly underestimated the utility line items in the budget. But not to worry because Supt. Malvey has worked out a plan with the utility company to pay these charges over a six-month period in the new fiscal year. There was talk of finally putting out some of the lights and installing timers as has been suggested for several years by many factions in town.

The following week, July 22, the Mariner again carried an article about another unpaid school utility bill, this time for gas, in the amount of $90K that had mysteriously surfaced from an unknown location. According to the article, Supt. Malvey again worked out the same deal with the utility company. But the only wrinkle in this scheme is the state law that prohibits paying for incurred charges from one year with funds in another.

So from what I read it looks like we are to be faced at the next town meeting with a questionable amount of money to cover the utility deficits in last year's school budget. Was it one bill or two? Is it $90K or $180K or will we be presented with more bills from undisclosed locations in the weeks ahead?

I'm confused, the Mariner appears to be confused, and the elected board that is responsible for the funds must be confused. I did call two school committee members for clarification as soon as the paper came out last week but as I am writing this letter under the wire for publication I have not received a response to dispel this confusion.

With the fiscal irresponsibility that we have been witnessing in the last few years, the taxpayers shouldn't be confused when they receive double digit tax increases in the very near future.

The story behind town's sewer follies

TO THE EDITOR:

Richard Brooks and Paul Lualdi are correct in stating that the sewerage needs of the Little Harbor area and certain other existing residences must be met before any treatment capacity is allotted to new development. That priority exists, and will be maintained; there is no need to get excited just because a statement by one of the selectmen could be interpreted as suggesting that priority be given to one of the developments now in play. And certainly no excuse for abandoning the Cook project (the only one designed to suit the town rather than the developer)!

Granted, no one knows what a judge may decide if one or more of the other developers go to court.

What is the reason we have too little capacity, difficulty in finding places to dispose of the harmless treated effluent water, threats of lawsuits, homes in need of a sewer connection to free them from an intractable septic situation and horrendous Title 5 costs, etc?

Answer: The town's decision 20 some years ago to forgo a large treatment plant with ocean outfall, to be paid for largely by state funds, on the naive assumption that growth could be controlled by limiting our sewage treatment capacity to the bare minimum that satisfies the state's environmental requirements. Voters soaked up seductive rhetoric about preserving the character of the town, nonsense about polluting the beach from an ocean outfall, exaggerated costs of hookup etc

Granted, many lots might have been built on sooner and with smaller houses (but not small enough to have forestalled 40B). Deliberately inadequate sewerage hasn't prevented growth or change in the town's character, but accommodating the inevitable changes has been rendered more costly and difficult. Amazingly, many still believe this short-sighted behavior made sense, despite its obvious failure

Although we have irrevocably rejected the state funding, treatment capacity can always be added, in one or more central plants, in developments or in other small groups of residences, or for an individual residence. The real problem is disposal of the essentially-harmless treated water. Unfortunately, the government in its peculiar logic no longer permits new ocean outfalls.

That we oppose new development is almost irrelevant, we are going to have some regardless and will have to deal with the problems it creates. What we should do is stop fiddling , build the capacity to deal with the pressing needs of current residents plus the development that is essentially being forced upon us by 40B and/or court action, and find some co-operative ways to dispose of the innocuous effluent. Then, having fed the 40B monster, control the character of the town and the nature of its growth by regulatory means, rather than such futile devices as limiting sewage treatment.

As former Selectman Tom Callahan has pointed out in another publication, in fairness to those who never will be sewered but whose taxes nevertheless help fund the sewer system, we should revive the idea of municipalizing the maintenance and upgrading of on-site systems, for an annual fee. Some would object on the grounds that it's too socialistic, but it would be more efficient than each homeowner having to deal with the maintenance and upgrading contractors, and would relieve the homeowner of having to come up with the huge roll of cash for an upgrade. From a public health standpoint, there would be fewer people continuing to limp along with failing systems discharging where they shouldn't.

Students to test shellfish beds for bacteria

A group of students volunteered to serve as the vanguard of this ambitious new project this past Friday.

Little Harbor, once home to several shellfish beds, has been unconditionally off-limits to the shellfish industry since the state discontinued its testing for fecal coliform levels in 1997. Fecal coliform is the principal strain of bacterium that causes illness in humans after ingesting shellfish. Since the state left off its work, no independent agency has resumed the rigorous fecal coliform testing necessary to grant licenses to fisheries. Due to a lack of updated data regarding this bacteriological pollutant, it is impossible to obtain a license to harvest shellfish in Little Harbor.

With the idea of eventually renewing the harbor's shellfisheries in mind, the Massachusetts Attorney General's office has recently pressured the Town of Cohasset to resume fecal coliform testing.

In response to the state's legal pressure, Steve Bobo, chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health, approached the CSCR last week with a proposal: he suggested that its students function collectively as the agents responsible for taking accurate and precise measurements of the harbor's fecal coliform levels. Qualifying the CSCR as "the only [agency] able to do [this testing]," he also underscored the importance of preparing the next generation of environmental researchers – the students of the CSCR.

A group of students volunteered to serve as the vanguard of this ambitious new project this past Friday. Some students, excited to work on the fecal coliform testing, deemed "extremely important" by both Mr. Bobo and Jack Buckley, dropped their current work in order to undertake this new endeavor. Others shouldered a second study. CSCR student Caroline Davis noted that, "it would be interesting to see how the results compared with the [data] from the Gulf River [study]."

Just this year, the CSCR switched its bacterial standard from fecal coliform to enterococci in order to comply with the state regulations for public swimming areas, which are based on the enterococci standard. Fortunately, equipment necessary for fecal coliform testing had not been obviated by this transition, and the CSCR lab remained ready to proceed with testing of fecal coliform this week.

Beginning this Monday, volunteers began receiving training in sterilely and accurately processing the fecal coliform samples taken from various points about the harbor. Students will follow the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection's Standard Fecal Coliform Membrane Filtration Procedure (SM 9222D), which is the standard applied in research labs statewide. The CSCR study will take samples from at least five sites.

Additionally, the Cohasset Board of Health and the students involved in the data collection and analysis will co-present a detailed report of the harbor's fecal coliform levels at the conclusion of the Summer Institute's session to the Massachusetts Attorney General's Office, as well as other relevant state agencies. Students will learn to create the appropriate weekly reports and a final report, designed to assess the possibility of reopening the shellfish beds. However, there was some skepticism from project leaders whether the beds would in fact reopen even after addressing the major sources of fecal coliform pollution, which the state has identified as storm water runoff and old or faulty septic systems in the Little Harbor watershed. Mr. Bobo cited an increase in watershed animal life as one of the primary factors contributing to high levels of fecal coliform.

Note: In last week's article, it was reported that the Gulf River emptied into Little Harbor; in fact, the Gulf River empties into Cohasset Harbor.

HEALTH NOTES

Town doing well in pollution fight

With the help of the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs through the DEP, we have blunted the progressive degradation of our soils by human wastes.

The Second Amended Final Judgment has been the guiding principal for a number of years while Cohasset has radically modified its posture relating to environmental activity within Town. Beginning in 1997, the Town has begun several groundbreaking initiatives aimed at combating the types of pollution which threaten the Town. Several things have changed over the years.

With the help of the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs through the DEP, we have blunted the progressive degradation of our soils by human wastes. This is in large part owing to the provisions of Title 5 which, although greatly maligned in some circles, has led to extensive and widespread improvement in our groundwater. Recent data such as those taken by the Water Department have demonstrated that septic systems are less a factor in tainting our groundwater than other contributors, such as storm water, surface water and domestic or wild animals. This factor, together with substantial improvement of on-site wastewater processing technology has led to reduction of costs associated with such processing, and improved wastewater treatment.

In addition, the Town has initiated some regulations designed to help. The so-called 400 foot rule to named bodies of water has required nitrogen removal from any new or repaired system within four hundred feet of any stream pond or estuary. This step alone has resulted, until recently, in a substantial reduction of algae in some of our water bodies. The Town has regulated the use of certain types of fertilizer known to cause growth in freshwater ponds.

It's no secret that the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs has observed with lively interest the development of these initiatives. They may not have gone as quickly, as may have been wished, but very substantial progress has been steady and encouraging.

Also, the sewer department has succeeded in sewering more than 800 homes, and has plans in place for sewering as many as 400 more. These are hard and fast plans backed by as much funding as we can afford given the massive budgetary pressures the town is undergoing.

Cohasset, through the Board of Health, is one of the first towns to implement the EPA's Clean Water Act's Phase II requirements, have our plan approved, and received a NPDES permit from the state. Furthermore, we have one of the most successful environmental public outreach programs, having published more than 300 articles on public health matters, of which about 10 percent were on topics mentioned in government environmental guidance requirements such as turf management. We have a dynamic and effective Water Resource Protection program advised by a committee of committed volunteer citizens; we have a wastewater committee consisting of highly qualified individuals working in the field, charged with making recommendations to the selectmen about septic and sewer issues. These are the groups who are providing guidance on wastewater issues. There are still others who cover broad health matters and other concerns such as emergency preparedness, elder care, etc.

These groups have enabled us to respond effectively to those who ask "what have you done for us lately?" And they will serve you with the most economical government services it is in our power to provide.

Hingham commuter boat parking fee is cut in half

Fare structure to be studied

"With some cost relief to commuter boat riders, I am hopeful we can reverse the trend that has produced a 30percent drop in ridership over the last two years."

— State Sen. Robert Hedlund

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, joined Governor Romney and Transportation Secretary Daniel Grabauskas to announce a reduction in the commuter boat parking fee as well as the creation of a special commission to study short and long term changes to the commuter boat fee structure.

In early August, the parking fee at the Hingham commuter boat lot will be cut in half to $1 per day. Hedlund, an opponent of the $2/day parking fee since its inception in 2002, has met with Grabauskas and MBTA General Manager Michael Mulhern on several occasions to advocate for relief for the boat commuters.

The parking fee reduction comes four months after Hedlund worked with the MBTA to waive the $2 fee for the month of March in response to the many frustrations commuters encountered over the winter.

"I want to thank Secretary Grabauskas and Mr. Mulhern for their consideration and positive action on behalf of the commuter boat riders. This is a good immediate first step to help correct what I believe is an inequity in the cost to riders of the commuter boat," he said.

Hedlund points out this action is needed now to help offset the huge cost increases to commuters over the last couple of years that have led to decreased ridership. "The increases in the parking fees and the fares have made the ferry service no longer competitive with alternatives such as driving, the red line, buses and commuter rail. That is obviously not a trend we want to continue. With some cost relief to commuter boat riders, I am hopeful we can reverse the trend that has produced a 30percent drop in ridership over the last two years," he said.

"We've been working with Senator Hedlund over the past several months to develop a policy that is equitable and provides an appropriate incentive for people to opt for water transportation," said Grabauskas. "This parking reduction really makes the Hingham ferry service an attractive transit alternative for the South Shore."

Until February of 2003, parking in the Hingham commuter lot had been free. In February of 2003 the MBTA implemented a $2/day parking fee in the Hingham lot. Less than a year later the MBTA raised commuter boat fares 20 percent, from $5 to $6 for a one-way trip. It now costs a Boston-bound rider $14/day to use the commuter boats. The 10-ride ticket now costs $54 and the monthly pass for the commuter boat rose 25 percent to $211. Since the MBTA took over the ferry service in 1997, the average cost of a commute has increased nearly 50 percent ($12.80 versus $6.80).

In addition to the immediate parking fee decrease, Hedlund announced the creation of a special commission to study and report on the equity of MBTA fares between modes of transportation.

The recently passed Transportation Bond Bill includes a provision that creates a commission to study the fees and make potential recommendations for changes. The commission will consist of 8 members, 1 member to be appointed by the Senate President, 1 member appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of Transportation and Construction or his designee, the general manager of the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority or his designee, 1 member to be appointed by the town of Hingham by vote of the board of selectmen, and 3 members to be appointed by the Secretary of Transportation and Construction, 1 of which shall be a representative of the south shore business community and 2 of which shall be representatives of the service area who regularly utilize the Rowes Wharf / Hingham commuter boat.

The special commission is authorized and directed to study and consider service and facility improvements, fare structure, parking fees, scheduling and ridership. The special commission will issue a report to the MBTA with recommendations no later than 60 days after being formed. The special commission will issue a second report to the MBTA with recommendations relative to the long-term recommendations for utilization of the commuter boat between Hingham and Rowes Wharf, including the equity of zones and fares among varying commuting modes in the region such as Greenbush and the commuter boats, parking fee and capacity issues, and ongoing service subsidies by December 31st, 2004.

"Secretary Grabauskas agrees with me that as a matter of transportation policy the state should not pit one form of Mass Transit, like commuter boats, against other forms like commuter rail. This commission will work to rectify this disparity between proposed Greenbush fares and current commuter boat fares. It is my hope the information we compiled for the Secretary of Transportation will be the ammunition he needs to make the case to the MBTA Board for a reasonable fare structure for South Shore boat commuters," Hedlund said.

"The Commission will take a comprehensive look at the ferry service and help the MBTA put forth a plan that delivers convenient, efficient, and affordable water transportation for the area," said Secretary Grabauskas.

Current state statute requires MBTA board of directors approval of any fare changes.

In expressing the need for this commission, Hedlund points to the discrepancy between the current cost of the commuter boat out of Hingham and the proposed cost of the Greenbush commuter rail fare to Boston from the zones closest to the ferry service. The one-way cost of a commuter boat ride out of Hingham is $6, while the fare to Boston from the proposed East Weymouth Greenbush stop is set at $3.50 and West Hingham is set at $3.75. Both of these proposed Greenbush stations are in immediate proximity to the commuter boat terminal in Hingham.

Hedlund further points out that the MBTA subsidizes the ferry service at a significantly lower rate than they will the Greenbush line, meaning the riders of the ferry service are forced to pay a bigger share. The commuter rail operating subsidy on Greenbush is projected to be $3.50 per rider per trip, which reflects operating costs only. If the commuter rail capital debt service were also allocated per person, the subsidy would be over $15.00. By contrast, the MBTA commuter boat subsidy is currently .90 cents per person (which includes operational costs and capital amortization).

"If we are serious about our commitment to support and grow all forms of Mass Transportation, than we need to address the discrepancy between the subsidies and fares between the various modes of transportation. This new commission will do just that," said Hedlund.

A real political convention

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I tell you they just aren't making political conventions like they used to anymore. If they did then why am I watching reruns of "Sabrina the Teen Aged Witch" in prime time on Nickelodeon and "Get Shorty" for the 25th time on The Movie Channel?

It's either that or listen to another speech by Bill Clinton or watch the cops beat up on a protester trying to escape from his cage or catch a delegate from Texas asleep during a roll call.

Let me tell you about a real political convention. It was the first one that I recall taking a great interest in and it hooked me on conventions until recently when the script writers took them over.

It was a hot July in 1948 in Philadelphia when the Democrats met to choose a successor to President Harry Truman as their candidate to run against Republican Thomas Dewey.

Harry wanted the job, too, but no one really liked him. Three years after he succeeded the late FDR, hardly anyone in Convention Hall was willing to trust him to win the Oval Office on his own.

A goodly part of the Democratic party, the bosses, the unions, the professional pols, the ones who counted, were behind Gen. Dwight Eisenhower, the hero of World War II, who declined the opportunity.

No one in the "Draft Ike" movement had the slightest idea whether he was a Democrat or Republican and it was good that he turned them down because he turned up as the Republican candidate four years later.

A group of Southern Democrats held out for Sen. Richard Russell of Georgia because they saw signs that Harry might move toward integration of the races if he were given a second term.

Unhappy Democrats nominated Truman, 948 to 262 over Russell and then the fun began.

The convention had turned to writing a platform when a black delegate from Missouri moved that a segregationist delegation from Mississippi be unseated and replaced by one friendly to civil rights.

A Minnesota delegate. Hubert Humphrey, the mayor of Minneapolis, rammed through a civil rights plank amid warnings that he was ruining any future he had in politics.

The controversial plank stated "racial and religious minorities must have the right to live, the right to work, the right to vote, the full and equal protection of the laws and the basis of equality with all citizens as guaranteed by the Constitution."

Eighty-five delegates from Mississippi and Alabama walked out of the convention and all the way to Birmingham, Ala., where they nominated Gov. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, for president.

Another group of delegates also withdrew and nominated former Vice President Henry Wallace for presidents. Their platform condemned "big business control of our economy and government."

Their place in the spectrum was fixed when Wallace and his Progressive Party was endorsed by the Communist Party-USA and their platform called for rapprochement with the Soviet Union.

That was the situation when Harry Truman began his 30,000-mile whistlestop tour by train across the country, in which he made 300 speeches in 33 days.

At on stop, the candidate that no one really wanted so excited one listener that he cried, "Give 'em hell, Harry," to which Harry replied, "I only them the truth and they think it's hell."

Last minute polls had Dewey winning by large margins, Gallup 49-44, Roper 52-37 and Crossley 50-45. An early edition of the over-anxious Chicago Tribune told its readers "Dewey Defeats Truman."

I was working for the Patriot Ledger at the time and I remember a syndicated Drew Pearson column coming in with an analysis of the men that Dewey was going to appoint to his cabinet. The syndicate killed it.

Truman beat Dewey, 303 electoral votes to 189; Thurmond had 39 and Wallace none.

Now that was a convention and an election!

Apartments at Pratt Building

Cohasset Historical Society's conversion of space at the Pratt Building into two apartments is proceeding at a fast clip. Both apartment areas have been carved out with the contractors dividing each apartment interior into living room, kitchen and dining area, bedroom, and bathroom. Wiring is done and sheet rocking will start this week. Each apartment has its own entrance at the rear of the building and will have new parking spaces for two cars at the front of the building.

The fully air conditioned apartments should be ready for occupancy on Sept. 1, and the Historical Society suggests applicants call 781-383-1168 or stop by at 106 South Main St., between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. weekdays for the necessary application papers. There will be no pets or smoking allowed. Priority will be given to Cohasset residents. Rent will be $1,500/month and tenants must be 55 years of age or older.

In August, the Cohasset Historical Society will have an Open House featuring its two new apartments.

DNC event tonight at Sons of Italy Hall

On Thursday, July 29, as the Democrats hear from their presidential nominee at the National Convention in Boston, many South Shore Democrats will gather to watch the events unfold on big screen TV at a grass roots event in Hingham.

You are invited to join the convention atmosphere at the Son's of Italy Hall on Rte. 3A in Hingham from 7-11 p.m. on July 29. As a "delegate" you will enjoy a grass roots version of the "big show" in Boston - in an environment decorated to feel like the national convention floor. Your participation will help with "Get Out The Vote" activities on the South Shore this November. The evening begins with a live conference call (at 7 p.m.) with John Edwards, John Kerry's vice presidential choice, who will be addressing grass roots gatherings across the U.S. Later, while viewing live TV coverage of John Kerry's acceptance speech, you can meet and share ideas with fellow citizens. (You don't have to be a registered Democrat to participate in the Hingham presidential convention).

Admission to the Hingham presidential convention also provides opportunities to; enjoy light food and drink, peruse the political memorabilia on sale, participate in a Crazy Political Hat contest, support "Get Out The Vote" activities in our towns this November and much more (don't forget to check out the bake sale!) This event is being sponsored by the Hingham Democratic Committee, the Plymouth County Democratic League and the South Shore town Committees that comprise "Coop 8."

Voters and future voters (age 13 and up) are invited. Tickets are available by calling Tom Vangel of the Hingham Town Committee (781-740-2757) or Tim White of the Plymouth County Democratic League (781-331-6900). "Grass roots" ticket prices make this an event that all can enjoy. Adults $20; seniors and young adults (18-25) $10; future voters (13-17 year olds) free.

seniors who may make a profit from the sale of their home to be able to take advantage of living in affordable housing. Fulton said the DHCD is considering modifying their regulations to help find a solution for seniors.

The entire Cook Estate development will be filed under the town's Senior Multi-family Residence Overlay District bylaw. The bylaw enables developers to build higher density housing in exchange for affordable senior housing. Developers are allowed to build 10 units of senior housing per acre under the bylaw. Cedarmere is looking to build 105 units of housing on 41 acres, when it could file for 410, and the Cook Estate is looking to build 95 units on roughly 31 acres, when it could build 310. However, the disposition of the land always dictates what can and cannot be built.

The Cook Estate affordable components will be considered as a Local Initiative Project under DHCD guidelines, which makes them almost a "friendly 40B." Chapter 40B is the more than 30-year-old state law that allows developers to skirt local zoning regulations in exchange for providing affordable housing, in communities which do not meet the state's affordable housing threshold. LIP is the mechanism by which the town makes sure units qualify or "count" toward the number of total affordable units.

LIP helps create affordable housing by providing technical assistance to communities and developers who are working together to create affordable housing for low and moderate income households. With LIP projects, the town and developer must work together. Towns can make decisions with LIP projects based more on their individual needs, and therefore the town becomes proactively involved with the development projects.

LIP projects differ from 40B projects because 40B developers are not required to work with the town, and a town can end up with developments that do not meet the zoning rules and regulations it has set. A 40B project can side-step the local bylaws, providing 25 percent of the units qualify as long-term affordable housing.

Amenities

The site plans for the Cook property take into consideration the target market for the development, providing amenities the active, 55-plus crowd wants. All units have a first floor master bedroom, one- or two-car garages, and loft spaces. There will be walking trails along the perimeter of the entire village, which could be linked with present or future "off-site" trail networks.

The plans also include a common garden facility available for all residents, and the existing Cook residence will be renovated into a "village clubhouse" to be used for social events and gatherings.

Floor plans for townhouses will come in four designs. Three feature two bedrooms and two and a half baths, and the fourth has two bedrooms and two full baths. Square footage ranges from 1700-1950 square feet of living space.

During a "pre-sale" period, homes will be offered at a discount and only marketed to Cohasset residents. After the pre-sale period, townhouses will most likely be marketed for $575,000 to $585,000 and increase in value as the project progresses.

$20 MILLION FOR HUMAN SERVICE WORKERS (H 4850)

House 156-0, Senate 38-0, overrode Gov. Romney's veto of $20 million in funding for pay raises for human service workers earning less than $40,000 per year. Override supporters said this will allow long overdue one to two percent pay increases for hardworking, underpaid human service workers that provide valuable services to thousands of vulnerable citizens including the homeless, elderly, abused children and individuals with mental and physical disabilities. In his veto message, Romney said he vetoed the funding because it is consistent with his original fiscal 2005 budget recommendation. (A "Yea" vote is for the $20 million).

Rep. Bradley: Y
Sen. Hedlund: Y

$10 MILLION FOR WATER AND SEWER RELIEF (H 4850)

House 144-12, Senate 33-5, overrode Gov. Romney's veto of $10 million in funding for water and sewer rate relief for customers in the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority (MWRA) district. Override supporters said this would help overburdened citizens in 61 cities and towns who are paying increased water and sewer rates that have been skyrocketing for years and noted that there are other programs in the budget that help other ratepayers across the state. They argued that a federal court order mandating the clean up of Boston Harbor is one of the main reasons for these rate increases. Override opponents said it is unfair for taxpayer money to be used to help only residents of a few communities and argued that there are other residents across the state that could use direct rate relief. They noted that the rate relief programs in the budget for non-MWRA ratepayers are not outright grants or loans. (A "Yea" vote is for the $10 million. A "Nay" vote is against the $10 million).

Rep. Bradley: Y

$4 MILLION FOR TRIAL COURTS (H 4850)

House 130-26, Senate 36-2, overrode Gov. Romney's $4 million veto reduction (from $103.6 million to $99.6 million) in funding for the administration of the state's trial courts. Override supporters said the additional $4 million is necessary to ensure that the courts operate smoothly and noted that some of the money is used for increased security that is necessary to protect people. Override opponents offered no arguments. In his veto message, Romney said he reduced the item to the amount projected to be necessary. (A "Yea" vote is for the $4 million. A "Nay" vote is against the $4 million).

Rep. Bradley: Y
Sen. Hedlund: N

CHARTER SCHOOL MORATORIUM (H 4580)

House 77-78, failed to override Gov. Romney's veto of a budget section barring the Board of Education from approving new Commonwealth Charter Schools until July 31, 2005 or until the Legislature approves a new tuition financing system for the schools. The measure also freezes enrollment at existing charter schools and prohibits five recently approved new charter schools from opening for at least another year. Some override supporters said it is irresponsible to allow the creation of more charter schools and require local communities to fund them during these difficult economic times. Others said that these experimental schools have questionable performance records and are draining desperately needed funds from regular public schools through a funding formula that takes too much money away from the regular schools. Some override opponents said that these innovative schools have performed so well that there are many children on waiting lists for enrollment. They argued that it is irresponsible to prohibit the opening of new charter schools that have already been approved. Others noted that the Legislature and the governor are already working on a new formula in order to improve the funding system. (A "Yea" vote is for the moratorium. A "Nay" vote is against the moratorium).

Rep. Bradley: N
Sen. Hedlund: N

PLACEMENT OF BABIES (H 4325)

Senate 38-0, gave near approval to and sent to Gov. Romney a bill allowing parents to leave their baby under the age of seven days at a police or fire station or hospital emergency room. The state would then place the baby into the state's foster care system and begin the process of terminating parental rights. Other provisions require the state to publicize the new law, teen pregnancy prevention programs and adoption information and provide that the law expires on June 30, 2008 unless it is renewed by the Legislature. Supporters said more than 40 other states have similar laws and argued that the measure would save lives and give young, scared mothers a choice. They argued that without this new law, unsafe abandonment or even the killing of babies would continue. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).

Rep. Bradley: Y
Sen. Hedlund: Y

NEW EDUCATION FUNDING (S 2463)

Senate 38-0, gave near final approval to and sent to the House a bill creating a new funding plan for the distribution of some Chapter 70 Education Aid. The proposal creates a new category of "Target Aid" that increases Chapter 70 aid by an estimated $150 million to $175 million per year over seven years beginning in fiscal year 2006. The measure also provides that each community would see its aid grow by at least $50 per pupil. Supporters said the bill would improve education by increasing education aid by more than $1 billion over seven years. They noted that the new Target Aid would be distributed under a plan designed to level the playing field, correct inequities and help communities that have traditionally received less aid than other communities with similar property values and income levels. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).

Projects open doors for housing options

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Senior citizens looking to downsize from a large family home do not have many options if they want to stay in town. Senior housing and rental units are limited and are not available for a wide range of incomes.

Those on a fixed budget who may have equity in their home but don't have much money coming in, may have no choice but to move from the town they love. But there could be relief in sight.

With three multi-unit housing proposals on the table, seniors could find they have more choices in the months ahead.

Avalon was the first new housing project to come to Cohasset. The 200-unit apartment project off Route 3A is not specifically geared toward seniors, but provides a rental option. It has been issued a comprehensive permit by the Zoning Board of Appeals under Chapter 40B, the state's 30-year-old law that allows developers to skirt local zoning in exchange for providing affordable housing. [The water commission is appealing Avalon's comprehensive permit, saying it feels the project could have an adverse impact on Lily Pond, the town's drinking water supply.]

In the quest to both fulfill the need for senior housing, and get out from under the threat of more 40B housing projects coming to town, a new senior housing bylaw — the Senior Multi-family Residence Overlay District bylaw — was drafted and passed at the 2002 fall Special Town Meeting. It enables the town to have more control over development. In exchange for providing senior housing, developers would be allowed to build higher density housing, allowing10 units of housing for every acre of land.

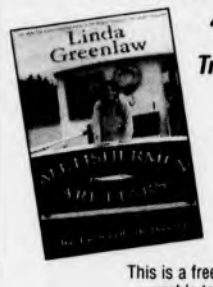
Last year, the Cedarmere senior housing development became the first project to file with the planning board for a special application under the town's bylaw. Plans have been regulated according to the town's standards right down to the landscaping. Cedarmere is the 105-unit proposed development slated to be built on 41-acres off Beechwood Street.

Under the bylaw, affordability guidelines have been set, and at least 25 percent of dwelling units must be affordable to residents who qualify at low- or moderate-income standards. Cedarmere would also have market rate units available.

The Cook Estate will be the second project to file under the town bylaw. If Cedarmere is any indicator of how the special permitting process will go, it could be at least eight months before the Cook Estate plans gain planning board approval.

Planning board member Peter Pratt said the Cedarmere applicants came before the planning board for three or four informal discussions prior to submitting plans, to gain feedback regarding what the board would like to see the plans entail. As the first project filing under the bylaw, the process was new to everyone. Pratt said Cedarmere formally filed preliminary plans in June, and was granted a special permit in January of 2004, eight months later.

"Even though it's a 'town sponsored project,' it comes to us equal to a private sector project," said Pratt of the Cook Estate project. He said he and the board were glad to see Jack Dawley — one of the principals of Northland Residential, the company the town is working with to develop senior housing on the Cook property — come before the board along with one or two colleagues for a "courtesy meeting" last winter. Pratt said the developers gave almost the same presentation as they gave when they presented the bid package to the Board of Selectmen, but it was informative and beneficial to have the entire board present.



During the Cedarmere public hearing process, which the Cook Estate project will also have to entertain per order of the town's bylaw, traffic studies were presented, as well as reports on potential noise pollution, light pollution, landscape design, and public safety vehicle access. Abutters to the project were invited to attend all public hearings, and provided feedback for the plans.

In addition to planning board approval, certain aspects of the project needed to come before other town boards. Since there are wetlands on the Cook property, Pratt said developers will at least need to come before the Conservation Commission.

Avalon and Cedarmere are both involved in litigation, which at any moment could be ruled on, which together, could potentially bring more than 300 units of housing to the town in one fell swoop. Avalon's Water Commission appeal was filed last fall, and has been taken to land court, but has yet to be settled. Cedarmere, which was denied access to town sewer, appealed the sewer commission's denial of a hook-up to town sewer, and is waiting for that outcome.

The town has a deadline of Oct. 31 to close the deal with the Cook Estate, which may not be set in stone. Revisions to the original purchase and sale agreement, signed March 15 by the Board of Selectmen and the Cook heirs, allows the closing to be extended for up to two 30-day periods, and the town will be asked to pay $20,000 for each 30-day period. At the closing, the deposits will be applied to the purchase price.

Patient Safety: Nothing Is More Important

Marvin J. Lipschutz, MD
Senior Vice President
Clinical Affairs

Patients put their trust in us — and it is our responsibility to demonstrate that we deserve that trust.

Publicity about some patients' experiences at South Shore Hospital has called into question whether we are doing everything we can to keep our patients safe. Given some of the sensational headlines, we believe that is a fair question that deserves straightforward answers.

We keep patients safe by having the right people, with the right qualifications, to meet the needs of the 150,000 hospital and home health patients we care for each year. Recruiting, educating, and retaining a talented and compassionate health care team is fundamental at South Shore Hospital.

We keep patients safe through the expertise of our 700-member medical staff, which is larger and represents more specialties than any other hospital in the region. Every physician undergoes a rigorous credentialing process before earning privileges to admit a patient to our hospital. All physicians joining our medical staff must become board-certified, a standard few Massachusetts hospitals require. And then, every two years, each medical staff member must be re-credentialed — a process that helps assure that only qualified physicians remain affiliated with our hospital.

We keep patients safe by assuring that certain physicians are on-site — not just on-call — 24 hours every day. South Shore Hospital is the only hospital in the region to have board-certified obstetrician/gynecologists, internists, surgeons, critical care intensivists, anesthesiologists, pediatricians, and neonatologists on-site to respond to patient needs any time of the day or night.

We keep patients safe by employing 1,150 nurses — more than any hospital in the region. Our nurses average more than 15 years of experience, and many have earned advanced specialty certifications. Nursing care is only provided by licensed caregivers. We have chosen not to reduce costs by allowing non-licensed staff to provide nursing care. That kind of savings isn't worth potentially compromising patient safety.

We keep patients safe by partnering with leading academic medical centers to bring their medical experts to our region. These physicians work at South Shore Hospital through clinical affiliations we have with Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center, Brigham and Women's Hospital, Children's Hospital, Dana-Farber Cancer Institute, Massachusetts General Hospital, and Tufts-New England Medical Center.

We keep patients safe by standardizing care and minimizing variations that can lead to errors. For example, since implementing protocols for every critical care patient who temporarily depends on a machine to breathe, none have developed pneumonia — a complication related to mechanical ventilation. We also take part in national studies where "best practices" are tracked, monitored, and shared. One example is our participation in a national cardiology database, to help measure how effectively we care for those experiencing heart attacks. As a result, we know our patients have a 22 percent better chance than the national average of initially surviving the most common type of heart attack.

We keep patients safe by fostering good communication among the dozens of different people involved in a hospitalized patient's care — physicians, nurses, case managers, pharmacists, therapists, social workers, nutritionists, family members, and others. Patients feel better — and safer — when they recognize a sense of community and teamwork in their care.

As talented as our staff is, we know we aren't perfect. We use technology to help safeguard against human error. One isolated patient-identification matter in our maternity center prompted us to immediately introduce the use of sophisticated electronic bracelets to assure that the right newborn is paired with the right parent. Another matter involving the quantity of medication that one physician ordered for one patient led to a swift adjustment in our drug-dispensing systems. And questions about safety in our emergency department have been addressed through improvements in how we prioritize which patients need care first.

No one can promise that medical care will be risk-free. There are many variables involved that can't always be anticipated or controlled. The human body is complex, and the processes involved in caring for it are even more so.

But one thing is certain: There is nothing more important to us than patient safety. It is the surest way to earn our patients' trust, satisfaction, and confidence. And for us, there is no higher priority.

'21 Lacrosse' a Fitting Tribute to 'PJ' Trendowicz

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

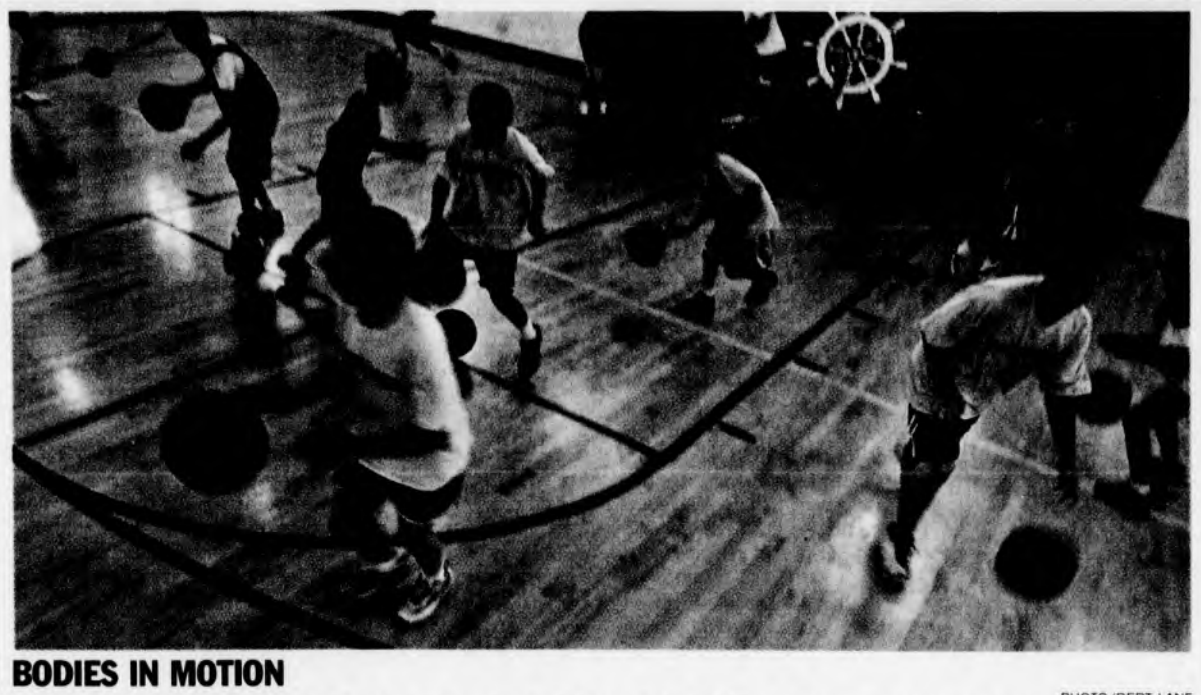
'PJ' Trendowicz and Rick Bagby were kindred spirits: both lovers of the game of lacrosse. They both believed in playing the game the "right" way and always giving 100 percent Only Bagby has been left to carry that legacy forward.

Trendowicz, a former star player for Bagby at BC High, died in a drowning accident two summers ago in his hometown of Cohasset three months after his graduation. He was all set to play for Coach Murphy at Bentley College in Waltham, an up and coming NCAA Division II program, but that was not to be.

As Bagby began his effort this past winter to make lacrosse his full time gig, "Trendo" (his teammates name for Paul or PJ), was never far from his thoughts. The process for putting things together for the business was quite arduous, with many difficult decisions along the way. One decision, though, that did come easy was the name of his fledgling undertaking: "21 Lacrosse". PJ wore the number 21 at BC High.

"PJ was they type of player that always put the team first," said Bagby, now the head coach at Scituate High School. "He was a very talented player, but what really stood out in my mind was his willingness to work, and to do whatever was in the best interest of the team. That is what '21' is all about."

21 Lacrosse will open for business this fall at the South Shore Sports Center in Hingham. Bagby has arranged to lease 36 hours of field time per week at the Sports Center from September 10 to the middle of March. His plan is to form eight team leagues in six to eight separate divisions for both boys and girls. The divisions will range from the U11's to high school level. Each session will last eight weeks ,culminating in championships for each age group. The majority of the field time will be on Friday, Saturday and Sunday.



As a "value-added" offering, 21 Lacrosse is negotiating for additional time so that each age group will have up to six clinics per session to hone their skills in the fundamentals of the game.

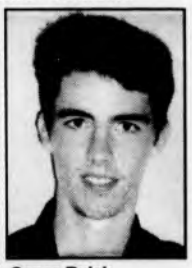
All-Scholastic boys lacrosse team



Cohasset's Buick and Previte named among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Several of the young men you see listed below as "Honorable Mentions" received serious consideration for All-Scholastic acknowledgement.

In the end, however, we limited ourselves to a team of just 18 and, after consulting with area coaches, we do feel secure that we chose the top male lacrosse players in Marinerland for this honor:

Conor Buick- Senior (Capt.)
Defense- Cohasset

Conor Buick

Flat out shutdown many of the state's top scorers this season…was almost regularly matched up against the opposition's top scorer, and seldom let his marks score anywhere near their season average…this tall, wiry and athletic defender showed remarkable instincts and anticipation when sticking to his man…second team Pilgrim Conference all-star…Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic Honorable Mention…four year varsity regular and key contributor for back-to-back state semi-finalist teams…performed much the same role with the CHS soccer team the past few years, being used as a stopper and sweeper, and also earned Mariner All-Scholastic honors with that team as a senior…two time South Shore League all-star in soccer…Honor Roll student…the fourth of five Buick brothers to star athletically at CHS…brother Ronan (class of 2001) was a Mariner All-Scholastic in football and lacrosse and is now playing lacrosse at Providence College…junior to be Aidan is also a standout at CHS in soccer and lacrosse…will attend the Rochester Institute of Technology (NY) and major in Math…would like to play lacrosse and/or soccer at RIT…Cohasset Coach Stew Curran: "Conor just shut down some very good scorers. I'd stack him up with any man-to-man defender out there. I think I can count on one hand the number of mistakes he made this season, and those were mostly when he slipped. That's an amazingly low number considering the caliber of players he was covering."

Cohasset's Jake Previte (#20) was clearly one of South Shore's most creative offensive players this season, as witnessed by his team best 93 points (48 goals, 45 assists).

Brendan Mulligan -
Senior (Capt.)
Defenseman - Hanover

A standout on the still growing lacrosse program at Hanover for the several seasons, Mulligan is making his second-straight appearance on the All-Scholastic squad...The three-time Pilgrim Conference All-star and two-time Eastern Mass. All-star has garnered praise from several Marinerland coaches, calling him one of the better defensemen in the area...Did more than his part in shutting down some of the area's best offensive threats, keeping the inexperienced Hanover squad in a number of games with his aggressive and skilled play in the backfield...On of his better performances was seen in a 6-4 setback to talented Hingham, a two-time Div. 2 Eastern Mass. champ and semifinalist this season...Also a talented hockey player at HHS, Mulligan captained that team in the winter...He will continue his lacrosse career next year at the University of Hartford, where he earned a full lacrosse scholarship.

Todd Faiella - Senior (Capt.)
Goalie - Marshfield

All-star is a five-year starter in the net for the Rams (11-6)...Aggressiveness is Faiella's trademark as he was not shy about coming out of the crease to disrupt the opposing offenses...It worked as opponents averaged only six goals a game against Faiella, who saved 63 percent of the shots he saw...He helped guide the Rams to the Div. 2 Eastern Mass. tourney where he had 11 saves in a tough 6-3 loss to eventual EMass finalists Concord-Carlisle...Last season, Faiella lead the Rams to the D2 E.Mass. finals...Also a talented linebacker on the MHS football team, Faiella helped guide the Rams to the Div. 1 Super Bowl last fall...He plans to attend Deerfield Academy next fall with the hopes of continuing his lacrosse career at a Div. 1 school.

Steve Curtis - Senior (Capt.)
Defenseman - Marshfield

A major reason for the Rams' success over the past two seasons, Curtis is making his second-straight appearance on the All-Scholastic squad...As one of the premier defenseman in the area, Curtis' presence on the field could not be denied, standing at 6 feet, 6 inches...Covers so much ground as a long stick defender and was the team's leader in ground ball pickups, his major strength...Also wasn't shy about carrying the ball the length of the field to create offensive opportunities...Played big in close games including a 9-8 OT victory over Falmouth in which he held their leading attacker to a single goal...Also kept the Rams in games against BC High (a 7-6 OT loss) and Norwell (9-8 OT loss)...Helped pace the Rams in the tourney by holding eventual Div. 2 Eastern Mass. Concord-Carlisle to six goals in a tough 6-3 loss...Curtis plans to attend Cabrini College with the hopes of continuing his lacrosse career.

Matt Murray -
Senior (Capt.)
Attack - Weymouth

Maritime Academy in the fall.

Chris Healy - Senior (Capt.)
Attack - Weymouth

Another talented attacker on the Wildcats team, Healy netted 82 points on 55 goals, 27 assists this season...A two-time Bay State League All-star, Healy finished with 160 career points...His play on offense helped Weymouth (15-5) snag a share of the BSL title and guided them to the quarterfinals of the Div. 1 Eastern Mass. tourney...There, Healy scored two goals — including the game-winner — and four assists in a 14-13 victory over Billerica and put in four goals in the team's quarterfinal loss to Malden Catholic...Had a six goal, two assist effort in an 19-6 victory over Natick...Was voted Weymouth's Most Improved Player...Also a football player at WHS, Healy plans to continue his lacrosse career at Springfield College in the fall.

Andrew Keefe -
Senior (Capt.)
Defenseman - Weymouth

This two-time Bay State League All-star took all the face-offs for the Wildcats this season...One of the South Shore's best defensemen, Keefe was a virtual brick wall in the backfield, helping to shut down some of the area's best attackers...Played huge in a pair of wins over Braintree, in a 12-4 win over a talented Hingham team, and a 17-8 victory over Needham, with whom Weymouth shared the BSL title this season...Helped guide the Wildcats to the quarterfinals of the Div. 1 Eastern Mass. tourney, where his gritty play helped hold off Billerica 14-13 in the first round...Also a talented football and wrestler at WHS, Keefe paced the Wildcats in winning the team Div. 1 South Sectional title and finishing fifth individually in New England at 171...He will attend Bentley College next fall.

Dan Bertoni - Junior
Midfielder - Weymouth

Playing alongside fellow All-Scholastics Matt Murray and Chris Healy, Bertoni added the triple-threat for the Wildcats (15-5) offense...The junior netted a slew of points on goals, assists this season, helping to earn Weymouth a share of the Bay State League title...Voted a BSL All-star this season Bertoni had a number of multiple-point games this year, including a two goal, four assist effort against Natick and two goal, two assist day in a 14-13 win over Billerica in the first round of the Div. 1 Eastern Mass. tourney...One of his two assists was on the game-winner, scored by Healy in the final minute of play...Bertoni added a goal and a pair of assists in the team's quarterfinal loss to Malden Catholic...Just a junior, Bertoni will be among the top returnees to the Wildcats squad next spring.

Ciulla goes yard

Former SHS standout powers up with Post 118 Legion squad

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Looking to keep things loose with his struggling team, Post 118 Legion baseball coach Mike Duggan showed his charges a $10 bill prior to the start of a late season game with Canton a few weeks back and said it would go in the pocket of the first player to hit a home run in the game.

Team funnyman Jef Ciulla quickly piped up, saying he probably wouldn't even be able run the bases if he hit a ball that left the Scituate High ball yard, never mind get back to the dugout to collect.

Coach Duggan shot right back, increasing Jeff's personal tater bounty to $20. A safe bet, everyone thought, as Ciulla had never gone yard to that point in his formal baseball career.

That all changed a few minutes later, though, as the 5-foot-8, 147-pound centerfielder took the first pitch he saw leading off the bottom of the first inning, a waist high fastball on the outer half of the plate, over the fence in right center on a line.

"I knew it was gone the second it left the bat," said the smiling Ciulla, who will start his sophomore year this fall at Endicott College, a school of approximately 1,200 in Beverly. "I'd hit the fence a few times in Little League and Babe Ruth, but this just felt different off the bat. I knew I'd gotten it a little higher than I usually do."

Coach Duggan dutifully tried to force Ciulla to pocket the sawbuck, but the little big man held his hands up in refusal and just laughed.

He then came out of dugout, still laughing and gave his grandfather, Frank Sammartino, visiting from Florida , a hug, and then got one from dad John too.

"To have my grandfather and father there to see that was just unbelievable," said Jeff, a former Scituate High baseball and basketball standout.

Of course, the odds of John not being there seemed pretty remote. Jeff noted he could probably count on one hand the number of his baseball games his dad has missed over the years. Then again, John did coach his son right up from the T-ball and Little League ranks and on through with Babe Ruth.

"What a moment," said the proud and beaming pop. "I thought Jeff had given me just about every thrill he could, but this was a bonus I never saw coming."

What's funny is that this is Jeff's first season of Legion baseball. He was a two year starter with the Scituate High varsity team, but his summers were generally occupied with work and summer basketball. After spending a year away at college, though, Jeff saw this Legion season as one final hurrah with many of his old SHS teammates and friends. And, to date, despite the fact the team has just one win, he's had a ball.

"I just missed the camaraderie of it," explained Jeff. "It's great just being out there, playing a sport you love and having fun with friends."

"It's one and counting for Jeff now," joked Post 118 teammate Joe Duggan, one of Ciulla's closest friends and a former SHS teammate. "There might be a few more in that bat now, and I think he'll be swinging for the fences every time."

Of course, the strapping 6-foot-3 Duggan, who begins his sophomore year at Mass. Maritime next month, has gone yard several times over the course of his career, so it's easy for him to poke fun. But, of course, this lighthearted clubhouse element is every bit as big a part of the game as bat donuts or the seventh inning stretch.

And Jeff found he missed all of these things a lot more than he expected to in his first year at Endicott, so much more so, in fact, that he's determined to try out for the school's Div. 3 baseball program this fall.

"That had a little bit to do with my decision to play Legion ball this summer too," he admitted. "I wanted to get ready for tryouts this fall. I have a friend at school who plays and I went to a lot of the games with him this year. I wanted what he had. I don't even care if I get much playing time or not; I just want to be a part of the team again."

The part about not caring whether he plays or not might come as a surprise to those who don't know him, but it certainly shouldn't to any who truly do.

"Jeff is absolutely ego-free," stated Scituate High boys basketball coach Matt Poirier at the conclusion of the 2002-'03 season. "Some people who've observed that, I think, feel it's an Eddie Haskell routine, but they couldn't be more wrong. What you see is what you get with Jeff. There's not a phony bone in his body. He's just an exceptional person."

As for Jeff's visionquest to try out for his college baseball team: so far, so good.

He started the Legion season slowly at the plate, not surprising given the time off, but he picked it up quite a bit over the second half, as witnessed by his move not long ago from the bottom of the order to the leadoff spot. And, also not surprisingly, he's continued to play a very solid centerfield defensively.

"Jeff has definitely been our spark plug lately," said Coach Duggan. "He's been swinging the bat as well as anyone and finding ways to get on base, and then make things happen."

Jeff had toyed with the idea of going out for basketball with the Endicott team this past winter, and played in pickup games with several of the varsity hoopsters in the fall. In the end, however, he figured he was a long shot and also wasn't sure if he could afford to give that kind of time commitment.

"I had to weigh the potential positives and negatives, and I just decided I should concentrate on my grades first," said the Criminal Justice major who finished up his freshman year with a solid GPA of 2.8.

He did, though, play intramural sports the school year round, and says he's now ready for the larger commitment.

Apparently, that's the kind of confidence that comes to players with a home run count.

fourth place lacrosse team in the boys Scholastic Division.

The Massachusetts Amateur Sports Foundation (MASF), organizer of the Bay State Summer & Winter Games, provides quality Olympic-style athletic competitions and developmental programs for Massachusetts' amateur athletes of all ages and abilities. The MASF operates statewide and year-round to promote personal development, education, physical fitness, teamwork, sportsmanship and mutual respect. The MASF is a member of the National Congress of State Games, which is comprised of 42 states nationwide that conduct State Games events.

The year 2004 marked the 23nd anniversary of the Bay State Summer Games and the 19th year of the Bay State Winter Games. From a modest beginning of four sports and 300 athletes, the Games have grown to include over 10,000 athletes in 27 different sports from over 350 Massachusetts cities and towns. Each sport is organized according to national governing body rules. Age and skill divisions have been created to allow medal opportunities for a broad range of athletes.

In conjunction with MASF, Verizon annually presents $12,000 in scholarships to six Bay State Games student-athletes who best demonstrate outstanding achievement in academics, athletics and community service. The MASF teams up with New Balance Athletic Shoe, Inc. for a state-wide sportsmanship Initiative designed to promote sportsmanship and recognize those who are ambassadors of it throughout the state.

Bay State Games Mission: To promote personal development, education, fitness, teamwork and sportsmanship through athletic competitions and scholarship programs for the people of Massachusetts. " hour game, then go home," said Bagby, "but rather offer fundamental as well as specialty clinics throughout the sessions. We want the kids to understand and appreciate the game."

Fall leagues are now forming. If you are interested, you may visit the 21 Lacrosse website (on line by August 1) at www.21lacrosse.com. or you can contact Rick Bagby at 781-264-6030 or via e-mail at rbagby@21lacrosse.com. In addition, Bagby is looking to arrange a goalie clinic this summer in Scituate. If you are interested, please contact him as soon as possible. Space will be very limited.

Bagby, a former standout goalie at Hampden-Sydney College in Virginia, has previously served as head lacrosse coach at the University of Georgia, Northeastern University, and Boston College High School. While Director of Athletics at Emerson College in Boston, Bagby established an NCAA Division III program. Soon after becoming the Director of Athletics in 2002 at Bellarmine University in Louisville, Kentucky, Bagby sold the institution on the value of lacrosse. In 2005, Bellarmine will begin play in the Great West Lacrosse League against the likes of Ohio State, Notre Dame and the United States Air Force Academy, amongst others. Bagby was able to lure Jack McGetrick, NCAA Division I Coach-of-the-Year, from the University of Hartford. Bellarmine, along with St. John's University, will be the first new NCAA Division I lacrosse programs since 1993.

In February of this year, Bagby moved back to Marshfield with the dream of starting "21 Lacrosse". He also longed to return to the sidelines. He did so at Scituate High School.

"We have a bunch of great kids in Scituate," said Bagby. "Coach (Chris) Webber did a great job of developing the program. It really came together this spring."

The Sailors finished the regular season 11-5, were ceded fifth in the state tournament and won their first round game before bowing out in the quarterfinals.

Bagby's general manager will be Charlie Lonergan, his assistant coach at both Scituate and BC High. Charlie was a former all-scholastic performer and MVP at powerful Concord-Carlisle. He played collegiately at Hobart College in New York at the Division I level. Charlie graduated from Hobart in 2000.

Paul and Julie Trendowicz, PJ's parents, along with their son Dan, will be working closely with Rick and Charlie as they develop the various programs in 21 Lacrosse. Rick and Charlie will be handling all of the day-to-day issues, while the Trendowicz's will be more focused on the image of the company.

Bagby states that he and Lonergan will be very aware of both the style and quality of play.

"This company is a tribute to a young man who played the game right, and played it with class," he said. "We will not allow the play to deteriorate at 21. If teams want to play an overly physical game, they will have to find somewhere else to play."

21 Lacrosse has a tag line, "Love life … live for Lacrosse." According to Bagby, he thought of this motto with "Trendo" in mind.

Bagby stated: "Our tagline, 'Love life, live for lacrosse', epitomized what Trendo was all about. The way he approached life and lacrosse were awesome. He had aura about him that was contagious. You may ask, why 21, why now? Trendo would say, why not!"

21 Lacrosse will also be sponsoring an all-star team. They will be called the "Black Jacks" (another play on the '21' theme). There will be an open tryout in mid August, tentatively scheduled for a field in Hingham. Details can be found at either www.21lacrosse.com, by contacting Bagby at rbagby@21lacrosse.com or at 781-264-6030.

With Bagby's and Lonergan's collegiate backgrounds and contacts, they feel the "Black Jacks" exposure will be great.

"Unlike our leagues, which are very developmental in focus, the 'Black Jacks' will be the best players we can attract. We will work closely with each and every one of these athletes to reach the level they aspire to," said Bagby.

All fall leagues are currently filling up. If you are interested, you can fill out the application on-line at www.21lacrosse.com(available after August 1), contact Bagby rbagby@21lacrosse.com or call 781-264-6030.

The summer months don't have to make you crazy

Communication, humor are key

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Even during the so-called leisurely days of summer, it's not unusual for family members to experience feelings of anxiety and "burn out."

Trying too hard to "have fun" or to fit too many activities into one day, weekend, or vacation can add to the stress.

"Family life is a continuous journey with a variety of ups and downs," said Annabelle Wallace, a psychotherapist in Hingham. "It is the family that gives the children the foundation from which to build their lives . . . . Positive memories and loving support are the best gifts parents have to offer their children."

"Positive memories and loving support are the best gifts parents have to offer their children."

— Annabelle Wallace, psychotherapist

Humor consultants John and Ann Murphy of Hingham, who offer humor talks and workshops on the South Shore as well as countrywide, note with a smile that humor may actually be harmful to your stress.

"The very best humor is when you can laugh at yourself," said John Murphy. "When you find humor and laughter, you gain a new perspective because you see the other side of the same situation."

Effective time management and organization can also help alleviate summertime and year-round stress.

Effective communication is important to the success of all kinds of relationships – family, work, and social.

"Communication is essential. Children will feel alone and think you are not interested in their lives if you don't show interest," Wallace said. "Adolescents want their own space, but at the same time they need you to be a part of their lives. Try to have fun with them. Often humor can go a long way."

When two parents are working, it's important to give quality time to their children when they return home, Wallace said "Check in with them on how their day has been. Ask them how they are feeling about their activities and friends and ask them to share their concerns."

Whatever the challenge, Murphy suggests finding new situations to laugh about. "Sure, life is unjust, but when you laugh at problems and inconsistencies, you are in control," he said.

Personal loss and world events don't take summer off

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Among the challenges facing individuals and families is a sense of loss related to particular circumstances and events occurring in their lives. And world events can add stress to even the most leisurely summer day.

"Loss has many faces – loss of control, comfort, status, security, freedom, choice, function, acceptance, connection, pleasure, and loss of love," notes humor consultant, John F. Murphy, M. Ed., quoting Dr. Cliff Kuhn, a professor of Psychiatry at the University of Louisville Medical School who is also a stand-up comedian known as "The Laugh Doctor." Kuhn speaks to groups all over the world about using humor to preserve your mental health. Murphy conducts humor workshops nationwide with his wife, Ann.

"We deal with loss by grieving, which is normal and usually has no humor in it," Murphy said, naming five stages of grieving identified by Dr. Elizabeth Kubler-Ross – denial, anger, depression, bargaining, and acceptance.

"Humor doesn't have much power in the first three stages," Murphy said. "In the bargaining stage, maybe a bit. In acceptance we start to look at the humor. Roger Fulghum, who wrote 'Everything I Need to Know I Learned in Kindergarten' and other books, once said, 'Tears bring relief, but laughter brings release.'"

The Murphys have worked with more than 120 Councils on Aging on how to find humor in challenging situations. "Guess what? They show us more ways than we show them," Murphy said with a laugh. "Many older people have developed ways to find and use humor to compensate for their losses."

"Many older people have developed ways to find and use humor to compensate for their losses."

— John F. Murphy, humor consultant

The Murphys have also coached hospice workers who found ways to look and listen for humor and record it as a way to stay in control of the situation.

"They reported that clients who were dying would often offer humor as a way to stay in charge of their deteriorating condition," Murphy said.

The Murphys often share three quotes with those who have suffered loss of one kind or another:

• "Laughter is a powerful tool in a powerless situation." – Motivational speaker Allen Klein

• "In order to laugh, you must be able to play with your pain." – Annette Goodheart, PhD.

• "Just because you're miserable doesn't mean you can't enjoy your life." – A. Goodheart.

Following a loss, grief can help individuals release what is gone, express their feelings about the loss, and ultimately accept the new circumstances.

"Acceptance simply means the acknowledgment of things as they are, like them or not," Murphy said. "At this point we can begin to rebuild our lives. Part of that may be to look for fun – which leads to laughter which in turn can be shared."

Illness in the family is also difficult to deal with. "Whether it is a parent, grandparent, or child, illness causes many worries and develops a multitude of fears," said Hingham psychotherapist Annabelle Wallace. "Each family member will be in his or her own space coping as best they can. The best one can do is to be there when needed to talk about the issue and allow other family members to express their fears and worries, offering as much comfort as possible."

Children need to vent their anger and fears, and parents should give them that space, Wallace said. "If there is an ill parent, the child will be worried and need a very supportive adult family member to be available."

Divorce also has traumatic effects on the entire family. "Each family member needs to go through the stages of loss and grief and to handle the situation in his or her own way," said Wallace. "Allow the children to tell you how they feel. They may want to protect the parent and hold their feelings inside." Otherwise, those feelings could come out at another time, with the child acting out the anger.

"Children should not be victims of the issues between the two adults," Wallace said. "They are feeling the loss, too. They need support and to be told they will always be loved and that there is nothing they did wrong to cause the marriage to break up."

TV violence can also contribute to stress in children.

"Many children are feeling the tragedy of the war from witnessing the violence on television," said Wallace. "It's important to help them feel safe and watch as little violence on TV as possible. That means not watching the evening news, especially before they go to bed. This can be very frightening for them."

Parents can help children understand their own spirituality in the midst of some uncertainty about the role of the church and other challenges posed by these times. "Being good to others, respecting each other, helping those in need, moral values, and standards are important," Wallace said. "Children have so much to cope with and so few outlets to find comfort. If you believe there is a God or High Power, encourage them to seek guidance from [that source] and hopefully receive comfort."

Stress-free summer fun for kids

School's out for the summer.

While children are gearing up to have some fun, working parents are faced with the challenge of balancing the demands of their jobs with providing safe, enjoyable activities for their kids.

Both structured activities and unstructured time are beneficial to children during the lazy but sometimes long and stressful days of summer.

The National Association for the Education of Young Children suggests the following activities to keep them busy and happy:

• Visit the local library for activities, storytelling hours, and reading programs for children..

• Discover geography by learning about the physical characteristics of your hometown and deciding what makes it so special.

• Visit a children's museum to experience hands-on exhibits and encourage your kids to start their own collections of leaves or seashells (and unusual rocks). That can be done at Wompatuck State Park, with shell and rock collecting at Nantasket Beach in Hull or Sandy Beach.

• At night, collect fireflies in a jar or camp out in a tent in your backyard. Create treasure maps for children to find hidden "treasures" in their backyards.

• Go to special events such as concerts or summertime events or visit local collectors, painters, or backyard naturalists. Fort Revere in Hull offers free Saturday outdoor movies at dusk (call 617-727-4468 or visit fortreverepark.org for more information). Join in the fun at the annual Summerfest celebration in Hingham Square July 29-31 from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m.

• Share family history and photographs on rainy days or prepare an indoor picnic.

Laughter is still the best medicine

Humor may be harmful to your stress. That's the message from humor consultants Ann and John Murphy of Hingham.

"You may not always be in control, but you always have choices," they say. "In dealing with change, choose to find the 'funny stuff' in life."

The Murphys offer the following tips on how to "lighten up":

• Smile more. It makes you look younger and it makes others wonder what you really know.

• Keep a box of crayons and blank paper around to doodle or scribble or just be creative.

• Cut out cartoons from the New Yorker. Hang them up. Leave them around.

• Keep a book of humor handy. You'll find a whole humor section in your favorite bookstore. Pick one. Or two.

• Write down or tear out a joke and share it.

• Collect and share creative sayings such as: "Blessed are those who don't need everything immediately."

• Don't try to be funny – try to see funny. Can you see humor when you lean over to turn on the bathtub faucet and get doused by the shower or when you wait 10 minutes at the deli counter before realizing you have to take a number?

• Hang around others who make you laugh. Share your stories with family and friends.

Reshaping math and science education is key to solving outsourcing problem

By Mahesh Sharma
CAMBRIDGE COLLEGE

The migration of American jobs overseas is a hot issue, both politically and economically. Although the debate goes on as to how many American jobs have actually been lost to foreign outsourcing, most experts do agree that the number will likely accelerate in coming years.

Proponents maintain that outsourcing is healthy for the economy. Outsourcing creates new opportunities – relieving workers from labor-intensive jobs and creating opportunities for better-paying jobs in more efficient industries. Others condemn the practice, claiming that American companies do a disservice to their workers by finding cheaper labor overseas.

At first glance, offshore outsourcing would appear to be a substantial threat to the U.S. labor force. But in reality, outsourcing isn't the main problem we face. It's merely a symptom of an even more significant crisis in this country – the lack of an adequately educated workforce.

America has done a poor job of making mathematics and science accessible to its children and adults. As a result, generations of workers now lack the skills they need to become competent members of the efficient workforce. These young workers will miss out on job opportunities, fall short of requirements for college acceptance, find it difficult to graduate from post-secondary schools or transit easily from one job to the other.

According to government data, many of the fastest-growing occupations in the U.S. require strong math and science preparation, along with critical thinking skills and training beyond high school. Unfortunately, most high school students are not developing the skills required to compete in these fields or gain access to higher education. For instance, only 24 states require at least three years of math, and only 21 states require at least three years of science. Only nine of 100 ninth-grade students will complete an undergraduate education. And only two will achieve adequate competencies to cultivate the pool of future scientists and mathematicians. More schooling does not seem to be solving the problem either; fourth grade students score higher on assessment tests than their eighth- and tenth-grade counterparts.

There are numerous reasons for this. Our country has an inconsistent and under funded public school curriculum. We are also in the unique position of having one of the most culturally diverse populations, with inherent wide-ranging levels of parental involvement.

Without a sufficiently skilled workforce, it's impossible to stay on the cutting edge of innovations in science and technology. Relieving employees from labor-intensive jobs in exchange for better-paying work is futile unless workers have essential skills. But at the same time, we must find a way to create a qualified pool of scientists in order to remain on the cutting edge of technology. It's a complete circle of events that feeds upon itself.

Entrepreneurial spirit is the fuel of American innovation. Innovation and job creation are the foundations of American economy and its future. Innovation is accelerated by a constant and large supply of scientific knowledge. For instance, it takes approximately 12 years for a new mathematical concept to be converted into a usable process or idea. When a mathematician creates a new formula, the idea filters down to applied mathematics and physics within two to three years. Within four to five years, it reaches engineers and applied technologists. A few years later, innovators and entrepreneurs capitalize on the idea, taking it to the marketplace and creating jobs.

The best tool for to creating new jobs is a robust supply of first-rate mathematicians. Without adequate math and science training, our ability to create these jobs will continue to decline.

How do we provide our children with a superior math and science education? Change the way we teach. Raise expectations for our children. Provide them with additional educational support at home and school. In addition, we must find ways to improve the essential skills of working adults. Many do not have adequate writing, mathematical, or problem solving skills required for today's higher-paying jobs.

Reshaping mathematics instruction means taking into account the way a child processes information, as well as teaching basic math skills like estimation and pattern recognition - things traditional curricula don't typically address today. Once children understand the fundamentals, they'll be more likely to understand why equations and formulas work. We need to use methods of teaching that help children learn mathematics more easily and thoroughly, but also increase their comfort level with mathematics. We can't expect first-rate learning of mathematics and science if we don't provide first-rate instruction.

The professional scientists and engineers of the future will thrive only with improved mathematics and science preparation today. Inadequate skills will create a shortage of young adults qualified to fill jobs in information technology, biotechnology, accounting, engineering, and finance. Finding a dearth of qualified applicants, it is only natural that companies will seek talent elsewhere-and they'll find it overseas.

College program attracts teens

BEVERLY – On a recent Sunday, large groups of art students eager to unwrap painting supply kits and set up tripods moved into the quaint multi-family homes on Essex and Winter streets, the dormitories of Montserrat College of Art. They are not college students – yet. They are the high school students accepted to Montserrat's month-long Pre-College Program, and there are more of them this year - nearly 60 - than ever before.

The program, offered to high school juniors and seniors, as well as college freshmen, has grown in the past two years from 16 students in 2002 to 58 this year. Increased grant funding for scholarships, more course offerings and an extended program length, among other factors, account for the growth, according to President Stan Trecker.

"Pre-College is designed for high school students to develop a portfolio for college admissions, evaluate career options and explore the visual arts while earning college credit," Trecker said.

In 2003, with grant money through Montserrat's Destination ART (DART) initiative, whose goal is to provide enrichment and pre-college courses to teenagers from economically disadvantaged circumstances, the college was able to fund five full need-based scholarships to eligible students from Beverly, Lynn, Peabody and Salem. This year, with more money to give away, Montserrat expanded the number of eligible communities and also offered partial scholarships so as to reach out to more students, some from outside Massachusetts. Between the two years, more than $30,000 was given away to 12 students.

> "High school students who are thinking about art school want to be able to get a taste of everything."
> Lauren Young

"DART really helped the program prosper," said Doug Williams, who was director of the Pre-College Program from 1995 to last year, and is helping out this year.

Some changes include adding a week to make the program a full month long, which brings the number of instruction hours from 90 to 120, and an expanded course selection. Now, in addition to courses in life drawing, painting, photography, printmaking and sculpture, students can also study illustration and computer art.

The more variety, says current Director Lauren Young, the better.

"High school students who are thinking about art school want to be able to get a taste of everything," said Young. "Everyone has to take Life Drawing, but out of the other six subjects they choose three to focus on. So they receive intensive instruction in four subjects - all in one month."

Additionally, Williams, Young, and assistant Casey Baker, have added what they call their "personal touch" in the last couple of years. This includes telephoning every household weeks before the start of the program to quell concerns and answer questions, and providing in-depth tours of the school during visits. "Nearly everyone who gets a tour of the campus ends up coming to the program," said Williams.

Not only have the enrollment numbers increased in two years, but also the variety of geographic regions represented. Students came from six, mostly New England states in 2002; the following year, they came from 10 states, including Florida and Ohio. This year, they come from 13 different states that reach as far away as Illinois and Wisconsin.

"A lot of it is word of mouth," said Williams. "Students who come to the program and enjoy it will go back home and tell their friends about it. That's the best kind of marketing there is."

A no-bake cheesecake from scratch

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

The Internet is flush with recipes for No-Bake Cheesecake made with ingredients such as store-bought graham cracker piecrust, Cool Whip, and a box of lemon Jell-O. Not willing to use "convenience" ingredients, we wondered if we could make a no-bake cheesecake from scratch, one that we would really want to eat. After all, the idea is appealing, especially during a hot summer.

The basic concept was clear enough — we would test cream cheese, sour cream, heavy cream, various forms of milk (evaporated and condensed), sugar, gelatin (in place of Jell-O), and flavorings. We quickly discovered that a basic 9-inch springform pan needs three 8-ounce packages of cream cheese. Sour cream does help to cut the richness of this dessert and one cup was just right. We needed to lighten the texture of this cheesecake and decided that whipped cream might help. In fact, one cup of heavy cream that we whipped and then incorporated into the remaining ingredients was just the thing. We test condensed milk, evaporated milk, ricotta, and low fat variations of sour cream and cream cheese. We didn't find any that any of these ingredients improved either flavor or texture. We also tried strained yogurt and goat cheese but didn't have success with either. Finally, we settled on 1-1/4 cups granulated sugar for best flavor. We whipped it into the cream cheese at the beginning of the recipe so it dissolved and the finished cheesecake wasn't grainy.

Using gelatin was the only way we found to set or stabilize the cheesecake. Without gelatin the cheesecake will hold together when cold but it is extremely difficult to serve. The gelatin also gives the cheesecake an almost baked quality. The problem is determining just the right amount — too much and the cheesecake quickly turns rubbery. We settled on 2 -1/2 teaspoons, which produced the cake with the nicest texture. The gelatin needs to be dissolved in liquid and we used lemon juice rather than water in order to boost flavor. Two teaspoons of vanilla rounded out the flavors but salt and lemon zest, two common ingredients, were superfluous.

For the graham cracker crust we needed 9 graham crackers, 5 tablespoons butter and 3 tablespoons sugar. We pressed the mixture into the bottom of the pan and baked it for about 10 minutes. (Baking makes a big difference. Unbaked, the crust quickly turns soggy.) Once cool we added the cheesecake mixture allowed it to fully chill, which takes about four hours. The cheesecake should be completely set before serving. To combine the dairy we tried using both a food processor and a mixer and found the mixer incorporated more air into the mix and made for a much better texture. We began by whipping together the cream cheese and the sugar. Then we added the sour cream and finally the whipped cream and lemon juice/gelatin mixture. The finished cheesecake is unmolded by applying a warm tea towel or sponge to the outside of the pan and then running a thin knife around the inside of the pan. It is great on its own or with fresh fruit as an accompaniment.

NO-BAKE CHEESECAKE

Don't skip the pre-baking of the crust since unbaked graham cracker crusts turn soggy. Be sure that the cream cheese is at room temperature before starting this recipe - cold cream cheese will NOT whip properly.

For the Crust
5 ounces graham crackers (9 whole crackers), broken up into large pieces
3 tablespoons granulated sugar
5 tablespoons unsalted butter, melted

For the cheesecake
1/4 cup lemon juice
2-1/2 teaspoons gelatin
1 cup heavy cream
1-1/2 pounds cream cheese at cool room temperature
1-1/4 cups granulated sugar
1 cup sour cream
2 teaspoons vanilla extract

1. For the crust: Heat the oven to 325 degrees and adjust a rack to the center position. Pulse crackers and sugar in food processor until evenly and finely ground. (Alternatively you can place the graham crackers in a zipper lock bag and crush them with a rolling pin.) Transfer the crumbs to a medium sized bowl and drizzle with the melted butter. Mix with a rubber spatula until evenly moistened. Turn crumbs into a 9-inch springform pan and, using your hand, spread the crumbs into an even layer. Using a flat bottomed measuring cup or drinking glass, press the crumbs into the pan bottom. Bake until lightly browned around the edges, about 12 minutes. Cool completely on a wire rack while you make the filling.

2. Place the lemon juice in a small saucepan. Sprinkle the gelatin over and let sit for a minute. Cook over low heat until dissolved, about a minute. Set aside. Place the heavy cream in the bowl of an electric mixer and whip into stiff peaks. Transfer to a medium bowl and set aside. (You do not have to wash the mixing bowl.) Place the cream cheese into the now empty mixing bowl. Beat on medium until smooth, about 30 seconds. Add the sugar and beat on medium high until light, about 3 minutes. Add the sour cream and beat until well-incorporated, about 30 seconds longer. Add the gelatin mixture and the whipped cream and beat until homogenous, about 30 seconds. Pour mixture into springform pan and refrigerate until well chilled and set at least 4 hours or up to 2 days.

3. To serve, dip a sponge or tea towel in hot water and hold against the sides of the spring form pan rotating the pan and redipping the sponge for even coverage. Run a thin knife along the inside edge before removing the side of the pan. Cut into wedges and serve.

Moisture key to maintaining summer landscape

GREEN THUMBS UP

SUZANNE MAHLER

Should there be insufficient water, the plant wilts and heats up, photosynthesis ceases and the plant is weakened making it more susceptible to insect attack.

Unfortunately, many of us may have been deceived by the appearance of our lawns, and assumed that all our treasured plants were obtaining sufficient moisture. Much of our rainfall has been hit or miss showers or drizzle that has benefited lawns and weeds but has not reached the deeper roots of perennials or woody plants. As I weeded and cultivated a daylily garden this past week, this became dramatically evident. Just beneath the surface the soil was a powdery dust. Most of the showers have skirted my garden in recent weeks and supplemental watering has become a necessity.

Water is obviously an essential factor in plant growth. As the universal solvent, water dissolves nutrients in the soil allowing them to be taken up by the plant's roots and then transports them throughout the plant. In addition, water must be available to maintain cell turgidity. If a plant does not receive enough water, its cells shrink and wilting results. A third function of water is to cool the plant. Should there be insufficient water, the plant wilts and heats up, photosynthesis ceases and the plant is weakened making it more susceptible to insect attack.

Lawns and gardens require a minimum of one inch of water per week during the active growing season. As a general rule, it is better to provide a deep, thorough soaking of your plantings once or twice a week, than to superficially water every day. Light sprinklings compel plant roots to come to the surface looking for moisture, making plants more susceptible to drought, fluctuations in temperature, insects and diseases, and winter damage. Prolonged waterings promote deeper roots systems where soil temperatures are cooler and plants are more likely to survive and thrive.

Soaker hoses and drip irrigation are the best way to water gardens because they waste less water, deliver the water directly to the roots, and minimize the accumulation of moisture on foliage. When using overhead sprinklers, try to water early in the day to enable plant foliage to dry off prior to darkness. Otherwise, powdery mildew, fungal diseases, and slugs and snails are likely to flourish. In communities subject to water restrictions, try to focus your watering on one or two areas each time watering is permitted and thoroughly drench your plants rather than applying a light, superficial spray over your entire landscape. When using a hand held hose in the evening, try to water individual plants at the base rather than as an overhead spray. The acquisition of a rain gauge is an inexpensive, handy means of monitoring how much moisture your plants are receiving from the combined efforts of Mother Nature and sprinklers, but any straight-sided container can be used to collect water and a ruler inserted to determine the total accumulation.

Most sprinkler systems do not provide adequate moisture to the deeper root systems of woody plants. Recently planted trees and shrubs and woody plants showing the effects of drought stress are best served by placing a hose at the base of the plant and allowing it to trickle for an extended period of time until it drenches the root system of the plant. Thoroughly soak the rootball two-to-three times a week during dry periods.

The application of a summer mulch will greatly improve the moisture-retentive properties of your soil while reducing fluctuations in soil temperature. A one- or two-inch layer of shredded bark is an attractive and practical finishing touch to any garden or foundation planting with the added benefit of reducing weed germination. It is best to avoid having the mulch in direct contact with woody tissue.

Container grown plants require regular watering and by midsummer, those growing in full sun may need to be watered as often as twice a day. Wilting is usually a sign of the need for water, but soggy plants will also wilt and some plants will appear limp during the heat of the day even when they are sufficiently watered. Clay pots and porous containers dry out considerably faster than plastic or glazed ceramic vessels. Always feel the soil before watering as too much water can lead to rot.

The constant irrigation required for container-grown plants leaches minerals from the soil requiring the regular application of supplemental nutrients. A dilute application of a liquid soluble fertilizer on a weekly basis is recommended for continuous flowering and healthy, deep green foliage. An alternative is to use products like Osmocote that can be applied to the soil surface and each time the plant is watered, fertilizer is distributed to the plants. One small scoop of these fertilizer crystals, which look like tiny beads, will generally provide nutrients for most of the growing season.

"School's Out" was a rite of passage every June. Beginning this week, a national office supply retailer will be using the song in a back-to-school television ad campaign that features Cooper — in his trademark make-up — shopping for school supplies with his distressed daughter. The Founding Father of Shock Rock, Cooper is first in line when it comes time to have fun with his outrageous concert persona.

"My stage show is sacred, but otherwise I love having fun with Alice's image," explains Cooper who brings his patented brand of hard-charging, theatrical rock to the Cape Cod Melody Tent July 30 and the South Shore Music Circus Aug. 1. "In the beginning, I was the antichrist. We did everything we could to annoy every parent in America."

Even with gruesome make-up, a boa constrictor around his neck, and an ever-ready supply of fake blood, Cooper says his performances have always been based in humor — albeit often dark humor. "Except in the very beginning, when I really wanted to scare people to death, there's always been a very real sense of humor in what I do."

Not to mention real longevity. Born Vincent Fournier in 1948, the son of a Minister became lead singer of the Alice Cooper Group in 1971 and the next year he legally changed his own moniker to Alice Cooper, inspired by the name of a 17th century witch.

"I'm like the Vincent Price of rock 'n roll. I'm the villain who won't go away Alice Cooper is woven into the fabric of America. In the 1970s, I was very happy to be asked to appear on TV with people like Bob Hope and Dinah Shore. These days, I love doing the commercials and golfing in pro-ams with everyone from Michael Douglas to Jack Nicklaus."

Through it all, Cooper has remained a rock and roller, recording 29 albums and charting 14 Top 40 hits including "I'm Eighteen," "Elected" and "No More Mr. Nice Guy." His latest album, "The Eyes of Alice Cooper," released last year in a garage like setting by producer Mudrock (Godsmack, Powerman 500). The recording marks a return to Alice's musical roots — with clever lyrics, infectious melodies and a wall of guitars. It's guitar-driven songs reflect Alice's classic themes of teenage angst and frustration.

Cooper credits groups like The Vines and White Stripe with bringing back garage rock. "When I began hearing these new bands, they all sounded fresh and exciting, but they also sounded familiar to the music we made when we were starting out. It's the kind of music I have always loved to listen to and always loved to create."

(Alice Cooper will be at the South Shore Music Circus, Sohier Street, Cohasset, Sunday, Aug. 1. For tickets and information call 617/931-2787 or visit www.themusiccircus.org.

SHORT ODDS

Swedish researchers recently came to the conclusion that men were twice as likely to have hearing loss as women. They also found that shortness was associated with a family history of hearing loss. These findings have led researchers to speculate that factors affect health during the fetal period. Being born shorter than normal, therefore, may affect your health as you grow older. In the fetus, a low level of the growth hormone (IGF-1) might be a marker for adverse events, leading to a reduced number of cells at birth, which may cause shortness and the risk for early onset of age-related problems. With this in mind, researchers hope to one day prevent sensorineural hearing loss with growth-stimulating substances.

Although some are born with impaired hearing, others have developed a hearing loss from noisy environments, disease, or due to the natural aging process. Whatever the cause, the real problem is often not the hearing loss itself, but that most people don't know that help is available. We offer complete hearing health care services from an audiologist here at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth, and at our office in Abington. Why not call 781-337-1144 for an appointment for a comprehensive evaluation? We accept most HMOs, State GIC, Union Benefits, and Mass Health.

P.S. As part of the research mentioned above, Swedish researchers found that short men had worse hearing than expected for their ages.

School building tax bump leveled

Town to get $26M check

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The word "bump" may indeed becoming history in the lexicon of Cohasset residents.

Last year, the infamous bump-outs planned for village corners raised a ruckus and were summarily removed from downtown revitalization plans.

This year another bump is on its way out, leaving quietly by comparison but with no less applause. Property owners were poised to see a huge "bump" in their real estate taxes – upwards of $800 a year for a home valued at $560,000 — to pay for the $42 million Deer Hill and middle-high school renovation-expansion projects. But, thanks to a law signed last week by Gov. Mitt Romney that overhauls the School Building Assistance program, Cohasset's school building tax bump will be reduced greatly to about $150 annually for that same homeowner, according to acting Town Manager Michael Buckley.

About 18 months ago due to the sagging economy, the state Department of Education cut back by more than half the amount of money it would put toward new school building assistance grants — translating to more time on the waiting list for school projects to receive state reimbursement. Compounding the problem was a huge influx of school projects, now numbering roughly 420 on the waiting list for payment.

Sailing club floats its expansion plans

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Sailing Club is on a roll.

Although its plans to improve its clubhouse, add some deck space and a covered porch are in the early stages – both the zoning board of appeals and board of selectmen gave the proposal a warm reception.

Jim Porter, a trustee of the non-profit organization, said the 25-year-old clubhouse on Government Island is showing its age and needs repairs.

"Doors don't open well and windows don't open and close," he said. "Some of the structural beams are rotting."

Porter said while the club is a tremendous resource for the children in the community – improvements to the clubhouse including adding decks, would make the place more appealing to adults.

"We'd like to create a structure that invites more adults to get involved," he said.

Porter explained no fundraising has been started and no committee formed to get the process started. The plans are "rough," he said.

Building designer Heidi Condon asked the ZBA what the Residents applied for ombudsman

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

When the Waterfield Design Group sent in its application for the MBTA ombudsman position, it was measured against at least three Cohasset residents who also responded to the July 2002 advertisement for the position. Now that Greenbush is coming down the tracks, some residents are questioning why the Winchester-based design group was awarded the contract, when there were willing and able candidates right here in town.

While acting Town Manager Michael Buckley said the names of applicants for the ombudsman position must be kept confidential, even now, two years after the fact, selectmen's meetings have brought to the surface that Selectman Ralph Dormitzer, Tom Gruber of Pratt Court, and Wig Pierson of Atlantic Avenue, all applied for the position. Today, many residents think the town would be in a better position had it hired someone local.

Pierson and his wife Molly applied for the position as a team. "We thought the town would get a double benefit," he said. Molly had covered MBTA

Local artist gives gift of courage

Book to help kids with cancer

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

In the realm of a child's imagination, anything is possible. Under the kitchen table, a land of discovery can be found, as tales of a great astronaut piloting a rocketship unfold. A magic carpet, masquerading as a beach towel, can soar through the air to the far side of the clouds, magically transforming itself into the ship of a seafaring pirate.

It is this strength of imagination that local artist Donna Green is counting on to harness the positive thoughts and emotions necessary to help children who have been diagnosed with cancer fight the toughest battle of their lives. Through her soon-to-be published book, "The Velveteen Rabbit's Gift of Courage," she hopes to empower youngsters to see themselves as a brave knight, battling dragon-like cancer creatures that attack their healthy blood cells, rather than as a child who has become weak from an illness.

"Mind over matter is enormous," for anyone fighting a battle with their health, said Green. She added, if a child is given the tools to deal with cancer on a level they can relate to, and they are able to maintain a positive attitude, the results can be overwhelming. Green said children are very resilient and have an unbelievable ability to heal —and if both the child and his or her family have a positive attitude, it becomes much easier to face the disease head on. "Even if we change one child's outcome by the way they approach their challenge, then it's worth it," she said.

Green said she has been working to compile care packages which will include not only her book, "The Velveteen Rabbit's Gift of Courage," which also serves as a journal for the children and their families to write in, but a meditation CD, interactive note cards, and a velveteen rabbit for a child to hold during tough times when they need it. The package comes in a soft, medieval-style hat, which a young knight might wear after he or she loses their hair to chemotherapy treatments. Green, who has a studio on Elm Street in the village, said her initial goal is to send out 20,000 care packages to children with cancer.

To help in her efforts, Green started the Magical Moon Foundation, which will enable her to send the care packages at no cost to the patient. In order for the project to get off the ground, $150,000 is needed to secure a place with the publisher. Green said people have been

Sidewalk discussion is back to square one

Subject could come up Tuesday

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

After endless meetings and years of debate, members of the Waterfield Design Group will hopefully be asked to make their last and final set of changes to plans for the downtown area. However, there is still one remaining kink in the plans — the sidewalk.

It was thought the Downtown Village Revitalization Review Committee, charged with looking over and "tweaking" Waterfield's plans for the downtown area, had reached the consensus that asphalt would be more suitable and easier to maintain than brick or concrete. However, Selectman Ralph Dormtizer, who sits on the committee, said the conversation is back on the table.

Although the committee formed a consensus that it would recommend asphalt, it may be asked to rethink that option. Voters at the fall 2003 Special Town Meeting voted in favor of concrete as a paving option, and changing that now may go against that decision, which is a concern expressed by Selectman Ronnie McMorris, according to Dormitzer. McMorris could not immediately be reached for comment.

Dormitzer said he believes there could be a compromise.

"My personal view is that we ought to do concrete pavers," said Dormitzer, adding he thinks by using pavers it will be a compromise that will satisfy the Town Meeting vote for concrete as well as the committee's interest in having a material other than poured concrete.

Dormitzer said he has heard the new movie theater on Front Street in Scituate Harbor is surrounded by concrete pavers, and he was planning on going over to take a look. He said he is going to suggest other committee members do the same. Members of the committee hope to present a finalized set of plans to selectmen at the board's Aug. 10 meeting, in order to meet the deadline they are working with.

Thieves, vandals destroy statue of little girl by pond

Police Chief James Hussey would like anyone with information about an apparent larceny of a statue of a little girl behind a Straits Pond home to contact the police at 781-383-1055.

Sometime overnight from Tuesday into Wednesday morning, thieves knocked over an 80-year-old statue of a little girl behind the home at 739 Jerusalem Road and attempted to drag it off. In the process, the statue broke apart and what was left behind were the knees and below – the rest was taken, Hussey said.

The statue which resembles Alice in Wonderland is the subject of much folklore around town and is considered historic, valued at several thousand dollars.

It was thought that the people who initially installed the statue had lost a little girl, but it's not clear if that story is true.

Nevertheless, the four-foot tall statue has meaning and is a landmark near Straits Pond. Hussey said police do not have any suspects but think at least two people were involved because the statue weighs about 500 lbs.

He explained the vandals pushed the statue back and forth to get it off its base and then dragged it across the lawn. The homeowner thought she heard dogs barking during the night but didn't realize what was happening until she discovered what was left of the statue on Wednesday morning. She then notified police.

Residents say MBTA plans will impede emergency access

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The importance of being able to maintain quick response times for emergency vehicles has been a major focus during the town's Greenbush discussions with the MBTA. During an emergency, every second counts.

Plans have changed from implementing four-quad gates to standard crossings at Beechwood Street because the fire department has been told it will help with delays as the gates will be down for a shorter amount of time. While that is good news for residents on the other side of town, residents who live at the crossing are worried for their own safety, because whether the gates are up or down, the fire department could have trouble accessing their property.

Residents of 39 Beechwood St., a Victorian home which has been converted into condominiums, are very concerned current plans to reconfigure their driveway in light of the Beechwood Street grade crossing will not allow enough space for fire engines to be able to make the turn up to their complex.

"The way they (MBTA) have it planned, they can't get the fire trucks in," said Pamela Palmer, who lives in one of the condominiums.

Currently, viewing the property from the street, the driveway for the condominiums runs from the back of the house and along the right side of the property, virtually straight down toward the street. The rail bed runs almost parallel with the driveway.

The driveway will need to be relocated because as it currently stands, it is too close to the grade crossing. Because only two gates will be implemented, median barriers will be installed on either side of the crossing as a safety measure, which is required by the MBTA for whistle-free train corridors. Median barriers are a little higher than a standard curb and are roughly four feet wide.

A 100-foot barrier will run from the crossing up Beechwood Street toward South Main Street, and the residents have worked with the MBTA to receive a compromise of 60 feet for the median barrier running toward the house. The length of the 60 foot barrier may be discussed again at a later date.

"These are life and death issues."
— Pamela Palmer, 39 Beechwood St.

Due to environmental restrictions which prohibit the MBTA from filling in a wetland near the driveway on the property, the post-train driveway will have to take on an "S" shape, curving off its current straight path to the left, around the front of the pond, then hook back down toward the street.

With the curves in the driveway and the median barriers, Palmer said it will be impossible for the fire department to make a right turn onto the property. Median barriers will prohibit the trucks from swinging out to the left a little in order to be able to make the turn, which will force trucks to travel in the left traffic lane in order to get around the median barrier and into the driveway. Palmer said having fire trucks traveling on the opposite side of the road is very dangerous, and the situation will be even more confusing in the event a train passes through while the fire trucks are on their way. Palmer said even when the truck enters the driveway, the "S" curve is still too sharp and it will not be able to make the corner.

Palmer also said that the plans do not take into consideration that the fire department is slated to receive a brand new ladder truck any day which is larger than the previous trucks. Palmer has asked Fire Chief Roger Lincoln to come to the property for a test-drive, but the barriers would need to be marked on the road in order to properly be able to judge whether access will be impeded. Members of the fire department have come out to the property once before. "These are life and death issues," said Palmer.

In a perfect world, Palmer said she would like to see four-quad gates installed which don't cause a delay for the department. However, in reality, that is not an option. "We could never ask people to wait 2-1/2 minutes," which is the estimated delay time when four quad gates are down. Realistically, all she and the residents would like to see is a solution that would enable the fire department easy access to their property.

Beechwood Street residents have been trying to work out various agreements with the MBTA since 2002. Over the years Palmer said the MBTA has tried to take over their neighbor's driveway and turn it into the 39 Beechwood St. driveway, even though it was private property. The neighbor was forced to retain an attorney and the neighbors were pitted against each other for a while.

Greenbush is the third leg of the Old Colony Railroad Restoration Project and runs 17 miles from Weymouth to Scituate's Greenbush neighborhood as is expected to begin commuter rail service in 2006. Cohasset's tracks will connect the towns of Scituate and Hingham, and construction has already begun in those towns. Palmer said there have been sessions where she and the other residents feel they have been lied to or not taken seriously as they have been labeled as being against the train. "We're not trying to stop the train. We know it's coming," said Palmer.

"Criticism does not equal lying down in front of the locomotive," she said, adding the residents feel in general that their concerns over changes to the property have not been thoroughly heard by the MBTA, which she said could be a direct result of not having a local ombudsman to serve as their advocate.

"I think a lot of this could have been avoided if we'd had a good knowledgeable representative," she said.

issues for a local newspaper, and was very familiar with the story, and Wig said although he was not a direct abutter to the train, he "was very interested in the issue."

Dormitzer said he applied because, "I'm a pretty good advocate," and he felt he could be of service to the people in town being affected by the MBTA. He said it wasn't whether he was appointed or not that was the main issue, but that the people felt they had representation they could count on.

However, the third applicant is now being eyed as the perfect person to take over as ombudsman for the town. After serving as chairman of the Cohasset Greenbush Mitigation Committee, and attending countless 106 hearings, many feel Gruber has the experience and knowledge necessary to get the job done.

Roughly 50 residents attended a meeting with selectmen to discuss concerns regarding the MBTA and the ombudsman position, and the consensus was, abutters want one person from the town to serve as ombudsman. Abutters to the Greenbush line don't feel the ombudsman appointed by Waterfield (who resigned in May) had the physical proximity to Cohasset or background knowledge to properly serve as an advocate for the town. Train abutters say their complaints to date have gone unnoticed.

In light of that, abutters say they would like to see someone local take over the role. While Waterfield has appointed a new ombudsman, abutters feel a new candidate who has virtually no background with the town will only complicate matters, and that this is the perfect opportunity for the town to hire someone from within.

However, the town's $120,000 contract with Waterfield doesn't expire until October and members of the Board of Selectmen say they don't feel comfortable breaking a contract. At the direction of the board, acting Town Manager Michael Buckley called the Waterfield Design Group to ask whether it would agree to allow the town to terminate the contract it has with the company for an ombudsman. Buckley said Waterfield Principal Craig Miller is currently in Africa, and a meeting will be scheduled when he returns. The ombudsman position is paid on a pay-as-you-go basis, and no money is being expended by the town while it decides what direction to take.

Abutters have offered up Gruber as the perfect candidate for the job, and the two Cohasset residents who applied for the position alongside him two years ago say he seems to be the perfect candidate today.

"Tom Gruber is and ideal candidate, said Pierson, adding he has the engineering background to be able to read the plans and has the background knowledge necessary to be able to handle concerns from residents. "There is no question about it," that the town needs a local resident to serve as its ombudsman, he said, adding the town would be lucky to have Gruber. Dormitzer said he thinks Gruber is better suited to fill the position than even he would have been.

However, Dormitzer said he believes a good compromise for the ombudsman position would be to bring someone local in, and have a local engineer available to back that person up. The local person would be able to provide the advocacy many residents want, but will have the technical background of an engineer to oversee the job.

Gruber could not be reached for comment before the Mariner went to press, but he said at a raucous public meeting on the issue he would be willing to talk to selectmen to work out a job description, detailing what his potential duties would be as ombudsman. However, Buckley said at the same, heated meeting that as long as he is Town Manager, he will not be hiring Gruber in that role.

The Mariner made a verbal request under the state Public Records Law, and has been denied the names of all the ombudsman applicants. Buckley said it has always been the town's practice to keep the names of applicants confidential, and normally only the names of the finalists for a position are ever made public. Buckley said as far as he knows, there was only one finalist for the position and Town Counsel has advised the other names not be released.

ZBA won't put brakes on Rte. 3 towing business

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The business housed at 860 Chief Justice Cushing Highway – also known as 850r CJC Highway – has caused a conundrum for zoning board of appeals because of an identity crisis.

The ZBA struggled with determining whether 3A Towing and Recovery — the business housed in the building at that address — qualifies as an auto body shop or repair garage under the zoning bylaw.

Neighbors to the site living in Ledgewood Estates, a subdivision that straddles the Cohasset-Scituate line aren't happy with 3A Towing which is storing motor vehicles that have been towed to the site where insurance adjusters examine them. No repairs are done at the facility, according to the ZBA.

Cohasset Collision, which moved into a new facility off Rte. 3A at the other end of town, had occupied the site. But Cohasset Collision repaired vehicles and still does.

The question before the ZBA was whether 3A Towing – which relocated to Cohasset due to train construction in Scituate – is in violation of a special permit because it's a change of use.

"Do towing and storage qualify as repair?" ZBA chairman Woody Chittick asked his fellow board members. "Is it different enough for a change in use requiring a special permit or prohibition?"

Junkyards are not permitted in Cohasset, but automobile repair shops and garages are allowed in the highway business district by special permit.

In the end, the ZBA reached a consensus that the definition in the bylaw was sufficiently broad to include an automotive towing garage. The board upheld the building inspector's decision not to take any action on Ledgewood Estates' complaint but is concerned about the storage of vehicles at the site.

The ZBA is in the process of drafting a written decision.

$1M in state funds for West Corner Bridge

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, was successful in including $1 million in funding for the repair and reconstruction of the West Corner Bridge and culvert at the intersection of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset. As the ranking minority member of the Joint Committee on Transportation, Hedlund was able to use his influence to press for inclusion of this funding in the Transportation Bond Bill that passed last week in the Senate. After meeting with local groups such as the Straits Pond Watershed Association about the culvert, Hedlund was armed with the information necessary to convince his colleagues of the importance of this project and made this funding a top priority.

With the funding having already been secured in House with the support of state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, and it now being secured in the Senate, this earmark for the West Corner Bridge and culvert is assured of going before Gov. Mitt Romney for his signature.

Earlier this year, Hedlund was successful in having MassHighway inspect the bridge, a follow-up to an inspection done in June 2000. In addition, a private engineering company also inspected the bridge and concurred its condition is poor.

The existing culvert is outdated and over time the culvert has been filled with sediment and in-pond circulation has been severely impacted. The replacement of the bridge will provide the opportunity to recommend changes to the gate configuration that would improve flushing for the pond.

"Public documents identifying a need for greater tidal exchange to Straits Pond go back over 100 years," said Lawry Reid, president of the Straits Pond Watershed Association. "The legislative action of earmarking $1 million for the implementation of the Rte. 228 Straits Channel culvert replacement is crucial to the overall project's success.

"The earmark makes highly probable additional federal, state, and private grants for implementation of new expanded tidal gates, permitting, and other pond restoration costs. This $1 million earmark builds on the total of $141,000 that has been committed to this project by the towns of Hull, Cohasset, Hingham, and the Conservation Law Foundation," Reid said.

sailing club would be permitted to do on the site, which is partially in the flood plain. Selectmen who heard a short presentation on the proposal last month had no issues with it, Condon said.

The sailing club got more than it asked for. The ZBA did not see a problem with the plans and only asked the decks be put on pilings, the concrete pad on the grounds be removed and to come back if the club makes any substantial changes to the project and closed the public hearing.

Government Island is owned by the town which leases the clubhouse and its grounds to the sailing club, which was built in 1979.

said he thinks the committee has done a really great job working with the plans and said he is happy with the revisions that have been made. "We've restored some parking spaces and put in a lot of trees," he said, adding most of the changes at this stage are the fine details.

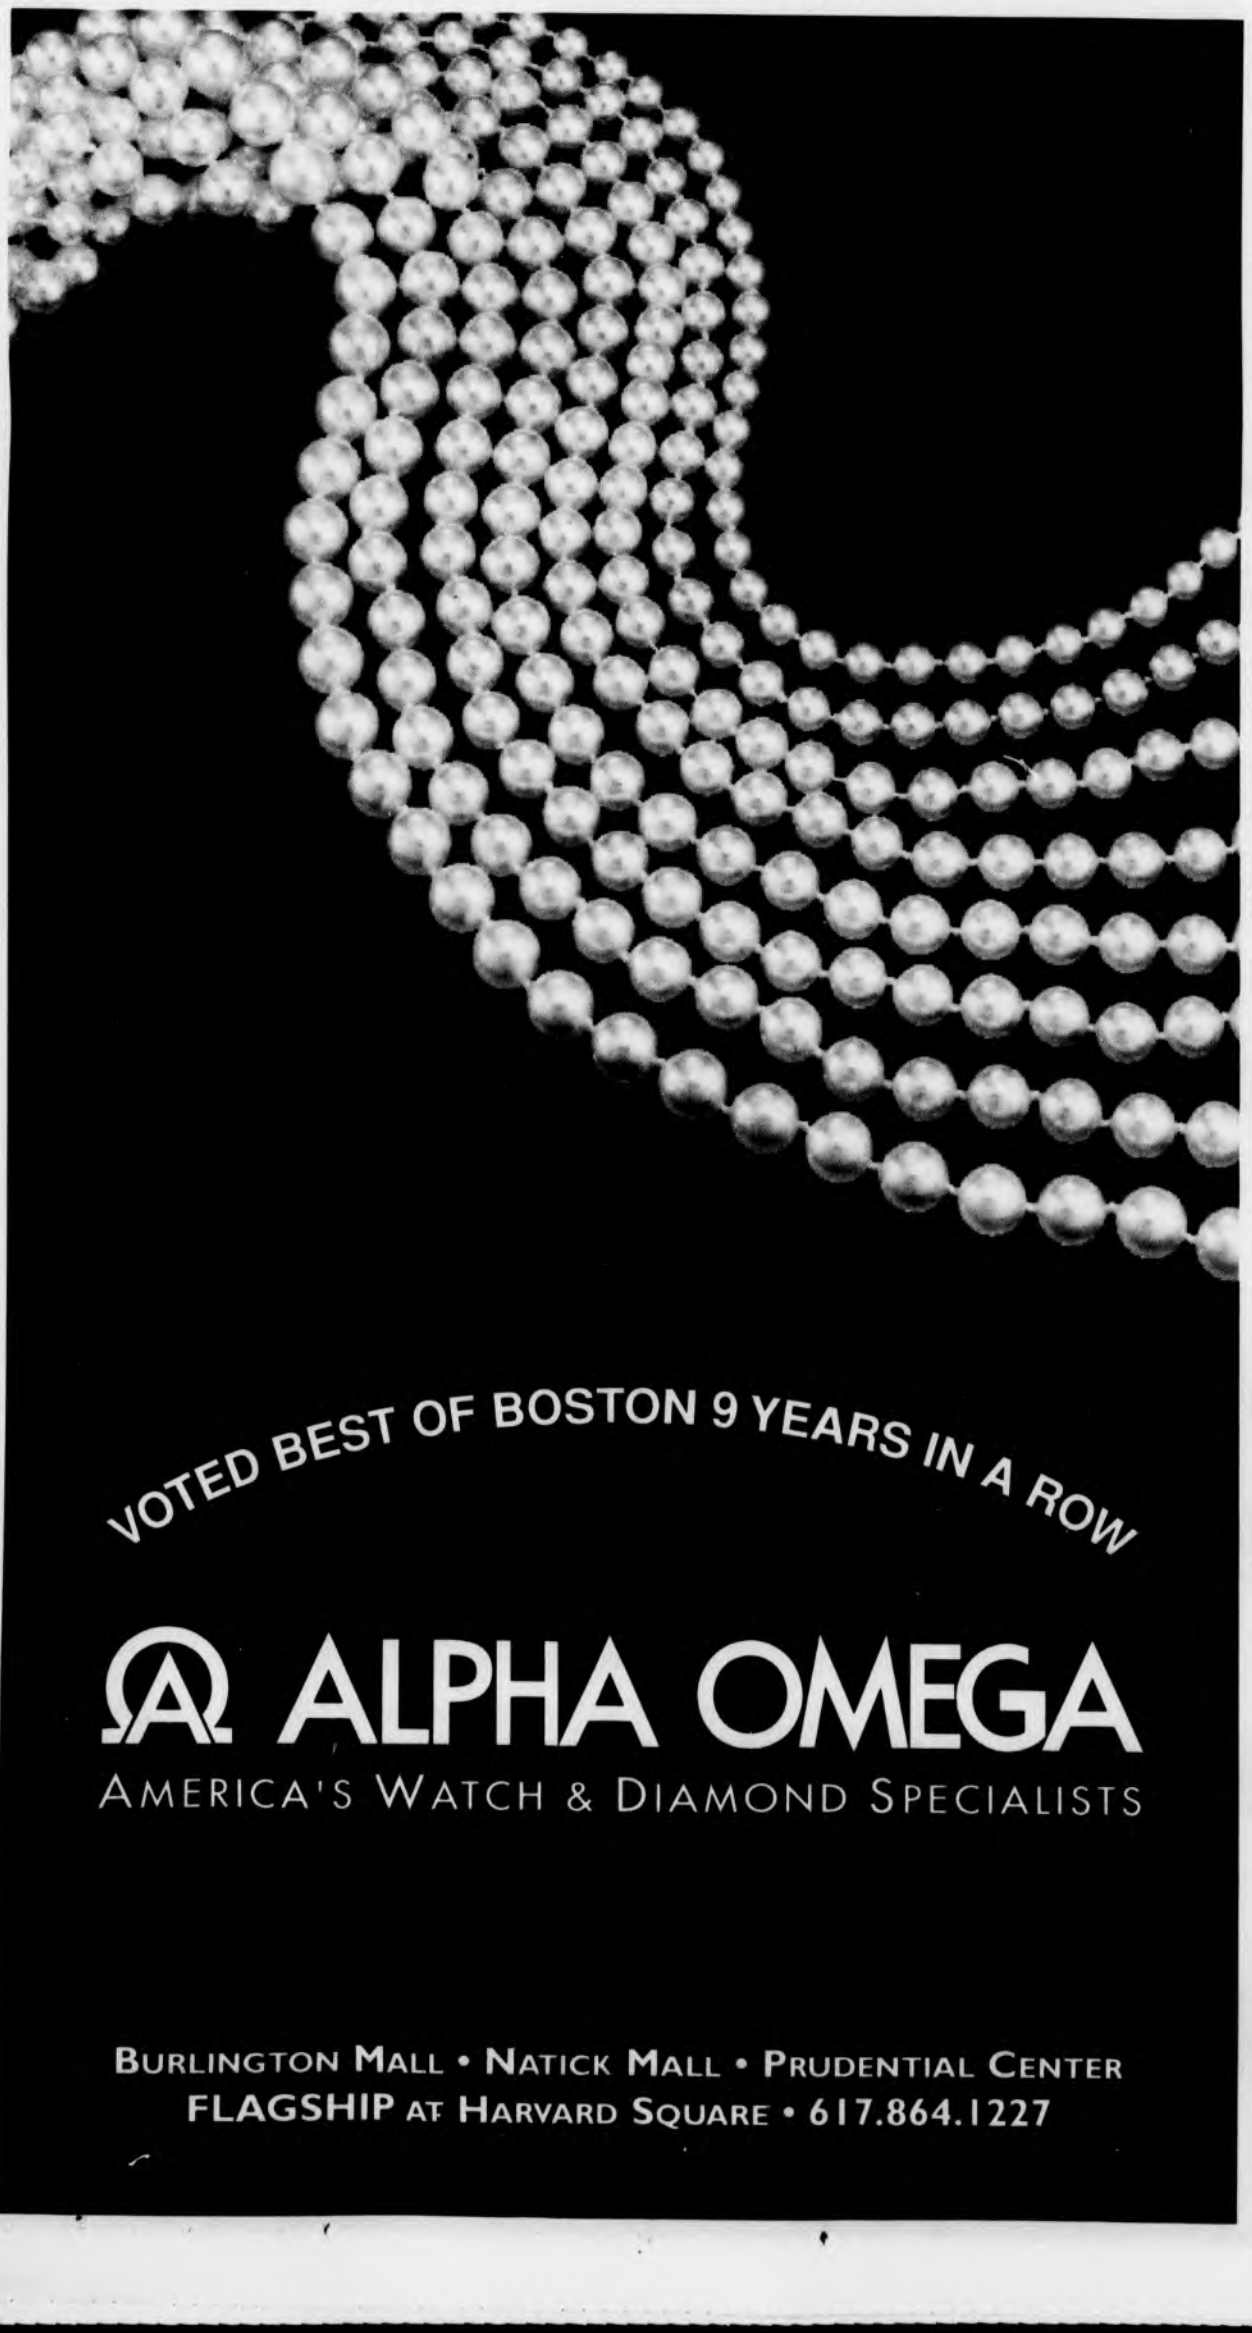
"The committee has made about 29 changes," said Dormitzer, and the sidewalks are the last item to be decided. The changes are intended to enhance the natural beauty of the village, while working with what already exists to preserve its character.

The committee believes exposing granite ledge and adding trees and grassy areas will help beautify the downtown area. The granite removed from the ledge under St. Stephen's to widen the sidewalk there could be used to enhance other areas. Some parking has also been restored under the committee's recommendations. Plans for decorative light poles have been eliminated.

The committee also stressed that existing granite street curbing should be used. Plans are to lower South Main Street by about 6 inches, down to the original macadam and that would expose more of the granite curbing.

Dormitzer said the Waterfield Design Group, which was hired by the town to draft streetscape plans as part of the $1.8 million Village Revitalization Project, will have to execute the changes, but the process is not a re-bid of the project. All changes can be made to the current bid drawings. Dormitzer said in order to meet deadlines, the committee must have their complete drawings to Waterfield by Aug. 12, which is why being on the Aug. 10 agenda for the board of selectmen is crucial. Waterfield must then make any changes to the plans, in order to have their part of the job finished by Aug. 28. From there, the project will go out to bid, and the town will close the bidding process Sept. 14.

Email notification about bridge openings



Local legislators including Rep. Garrett Bradley and state Senator Robert Hedlund announce their plan to keep drivers up to date on openings of the Fore River Bridge. Each legislator will be working with Citgo Petroleum, Mass Highway and the U. S Coast Guard to ensure this plan is effective for commuters.

Earlier this spring electronic banners were set up to tell motorists when bridge openings would occur. Though this service will still be provided, emails will be one more mechanism used to alert drivers.

If you would like to use this service, please contact your local legislator and provide your email address. Please note that the legislators will work diligently to provide the most up to date information. However, motorist using Route 3A should be advised that the exact bridge opening time is subject to weather and other conditions which may affect the transit of the tanker.

Papers signed for Logan Airport noise study

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Many homes in Cohasset begin to hear the roar of airplane engines at 5:30 every morning. As low-flying planes heading to and from Logan Airport coast over the town throughout the day, telephone calls are interrupted as residents wait for the noise to pass, and anxious mothers look to the skies to see if low-flying planes are leaving hazardous emissions behind. Fortunately, there could be some relief in sight.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer, who is also co-chair of the Community Advisory Committee to Massport, said today (Thursday) after two years of work, the necessary documents will be signed to kick off a $2 million noise study. "After months and months of work, it's all done and ready," said Dormitzer, adding hopefully the over-flight paths of planes will be made better as a result of the study. "This is really huge."

"It's Cohasset, it's South Boston, it's Chelsea, it's Revere, it's everywhere."
— Selectman Ralph Dormitzer

The noise study is a requirement of a 2002 legal order by Jane Garvey, who was then administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration. That decision authorized the construction of a new runway, 14/32, at Logan International Airport, which was expected to direct many thousands more flights annually over Boston Harbor, impacting area towns, including Hingham, Cohasset, and Hull.

The decision specified several mitigation measures to lessen the impact of aircraft noise on communities in the greater Boston area. The noise study is one of the more important mitigation steps, as it will address adverse noise impacts with the goal of redirecting flight patterns that are currently over communities, over the water.

By routing the planes over the ocean, Dormitzer said it would improve the noise pollution being forced upon many coastal towns north and south of Boston. "It's Cohasset, it's South Boston, it's Chelsea, it's Revere, it's everywhere," said Dormitzer. By taking a simple step to keep the planes flying over the ocean a little longer at a higher altitude, coastal towns can be spared the noise. "We have such a vast ocean and we're not using it," as a potential buffer, Dormitzer said.

Many area residents fought the runway for a long time, and some launched a court case citing noise, air quality, and potential negative property value impacts. However, the United States Court of Appeals upheld the Federal Aviation Administration's approval of the 5,000-foot runway, dismissing opponents' arguments as "meritless." The court case stemmed from claims that the Environmental Impact Report for the project was flawed.

The study will consider noise generated by aircraft takeoffs, over-flights and landings. The first phase of the study will consider procedures which can be implemented rapidly with safety and efficiency and do not have significant environmental impacts. A second phase will further consider those procedures which have merit but are deemed to have significant environmental impacts.

50th reunion is planned

Early planning is under way for a reunion bringing together the members of the 1954 graduating class of Cohasset High School. As well, a search is under way for those who were members of that class but were separated prior to graduation and would like to join in on the festivities. Knowing that most of those who were associated with this class have left Cohasset, it is hoped that friends who still live in town will inform them, as soon as is possible of the plans for the event.

Individuals who have not already been informed of the event and want to be included in on all plans should contact Norman Jason, P.O. Box 46, Durham, CT 06422 or call 860-349-3438. Much work is still to be done but it is necessary to know who is going to be in attendance before plans can be completed.

Saving lives one glass of lemonade at a time

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

When five young Elm Street residents are asked what they did during their summer vacation, they can safely say they helped save a life.

During one day of selling lemonade and treats on the sidewalk outside their homes across the street from the fire department, Alex and Eliza Kinnealey, and Caitlin, Casey, and Corianne Ahrens earned $51 and some change. At the end of the day, they crossed the street and gave the money that will be put toward purchasing a new "Automated External Defibrillator" to fire Capt. Robert Silvia.

"Everyone seems to think they have to donate the entire amount (for an AED)," said Silvia, adding a new AED costs roughly $2,000. He said contributions of any amount can be used, whether the money is put toward buying the machine or for books which can be used during training. He commended the children for their efforts and said their generosity will help the department reach its goal of putting the machines in public places all over town.

AEDs can be used to shock a patient that has gone into cardiac arrest. If the department has its way, the devices will be available at many of the public buildings where people congregate.

The AEDs the department are looking at purchasing are very user-friendly, are color coded, and "speak" to the user, giving proper operating instructions. They run on batteries, which have a life span of roughly five years, or 300 shocks, and come with two adult pads and one pediatric pad.

Living across the street from the fire station, twins Eliza and Alex, 12, as well as Caitlin, 13, Casey, 11 and Corianne, 7, are very familiar with the amount of help the department gives to residents in town. When they heard the department needed equipment, they jumped at the chance to help.

In order to attract some attention to their lemonade stand, Casey, Corianne, and Alex dressed up in brightly colored costumes and began flagging down cars and pedestrians. Casey dressed up as Frankenstein, Corianne dressed up as SpongeBob SquarePants, and Alex dressed up as a shark with an Irish hat and blew a horn.

"People who walked by couldn't say no," said Casey.

In addition to lemonade, the children sold cookies, brownies, and some candy. They sold glasses of lemonade for 50 cents each and the baked goods and candy for 25 cents. However, they said they had some generous customers, as some gave $5 or $10 bills, and let them keep the change.

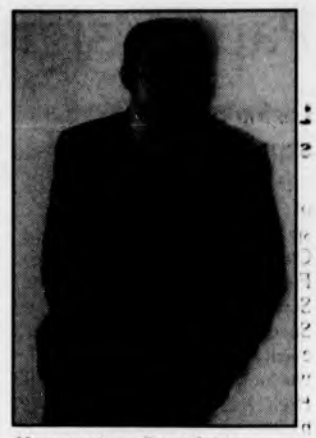
Casey Ahrens, Alex Kinnealey, Eliza Kinnealy, Caitlin Ahrens, and Corinanne Ahrens held a lemonade stand fund-raiser, donating the proceeds to the fire department, to be used for a new defibrillator.

At the station, Silvia showed the children how the defibrillators work. He explained where the pads are placed on someone to give the life-saving shock. The children listened as the defibrillator spoke to them and gave step-by-step instructions on how the machine is supposed to be used.

"For every minute you lose, it takes 10 percent off your chance of living," said Alex, which makes AEDs very important machines to have around.

Silvia also told the children one day, the department hopes to have defibrillators in all Cohasset schools. When that happens, "We can say we helped raise the money," said Alex.

The goal of the department is to ultimately meet the requirements of a heart-safe community, which means having equipment on hand that even someone with minimal training can use to save the life of someone who has gone into cardiac arrest. Silvia said studies have shown if a person can be defibrillated within one to two minutes of going into sudden cardiac arrest, there is an 80 percent chance of survival. However, that survival rate decreases with every passing minute, and with a delay of 10 minutes, there is a less than 5 percent chance the person will be able to pull through.



He added with the train coming to town and possible delays in response time for the department when the gates are down, having residents on hand that have been trained to use an AED will greatly improve the survival rate.

Any AEDs installed around town will be regularly inspected by members of the department to make sure the equipment is working properly. The department will also provide training on how to use them. Silvia said AEDs are a new trend in life-saving technology and the American Heart Association has begun giving CPR classes which includes AED training.

All five children said they felt really good about their efforts and were glad they could help such a good cause. In fact, this is the second lemonade stand Alex and Eliza have had to benefit the department. Before the Ahrens family moved to town, Alex and Eliza had a lemonade stand roughly three years ago, and that time gave the lemonade away for free.

They did however, have a sign which said they would be glad to accept any donations on the fire department's behalf. That day, they raised $91, which was put toward purchasing equipment to help firefighters see better in thick smoke. All five say they may have more lemonade stands in the future to expand on their efforts with the department, as well as help other community organizations.

For those interested in making a donation, checks made out to the town of Cohasset can be sent to the Cohasset Fire Department, c/o Captain Robert Silvia, 44 Elm St.

Takes on children's summer production

By Samantha Brown

Phoebe Knox and Callie Piepenbrink look over their lines during a rehearsal for the Cohasset Dramatic Club production, "Charlie and the Chocolate Factory".

For the past four weeks, 36 children ranging in age from five to 13 have been rehearsing for their big summer drama production — but it is not for the show they initially bargained for. They had anticipated playing roles in "Beauty and the Beast" but are now singing about candy as they prepare to take the stage for "Charlie and the Chocolate Factory."

For the past 15 summers, the dedicated Deveney sisters of Cohasset, Elizabeth, Grace, and Sarah, have conducted the Children's Drama Workshop through the Recreation Department. However, Sarah's wedding last summer took her away from the production for the latter half of the program, and Elizabeth and Grace weren't sure the show could continue this year without her. The two remaining Deveney sisters had originally planned on another summer show this year, but were unable to host the program at the last minute, leaving many eager young thespians without a play. Fortunately, the Cohasset Dramatic Club stepped in and put together a show in just three days.

"We got the call on either a Monday or a Tuesday," from Jack Worley at the Recreation Department, said Jean DiGiacomandrea of the CDC, who is producing "Charlie and the Chocolate Factory." Worley said the Deveney sisters had to cancel, and the program was supposed to start the next day. Although the CDC has never hosted a summer program for children before, when Worley asked if it would be possible to pull together a show at the last minute for those children who had signed up for the drama workshop, the CDC wanted to help. Because time was of the essence, members of the CDC board held a meeting that Wednesday to discuss the feasibility of the project. DiGiacomandrea said that night, "We decided to do it."

The CDC had one day to get the entire concept for the show together and the children only lost one day of scheduled rehearsal. "For being asked to come in at the last minute, we've done a good job," DiGiacomandrea said.

DiGiacomandrea said rehearsals have been going well. "Camp is all new to us," she said, but with productions dating back to 1921, she was confident the CDC could meet the challenge.

There were some technical issues that had to be taken care of before the new summer program could be started. Three CDC members took turns calling the parents of all 50 children who had signed up for the drama workshop. CDC members held an informational meeting to explain they would try to keep the program as similar to the workshop as they could but some things would be different.

"Some parents have said it's not the same as it used to be, but we've also had a lot of positive feedback from parents and the town," DiGiacomandrea said, adding that 35 of the original 50 children that signed up for the Workshop enlisted for the CDC production. An additional child, who is a veteran of many CDC productions, is also in the show.

DiGiacomandrea said the real challenge in bringing the show together was being able to find someone who could direct the production who would be available during the day. The CDC wanted to keep the same schedule as the drama workshop, which meant having someone available three days a week from 1-3:30 p.m.

Fortunately, Sally Wright, who has directed "Charlie and the Chocolate Factory" twice before, was available and willing to come on board. Because Wright has so much experience with the play, it was easier to pull the show together at the last minute, DiGiacomandrea said.

Hosting a daytime summer program for children is an idea that has been floated before among CDC members in the past, DiGiacomandrea said, but never came to fruition. She said with the experience they have had this summer, the CDC will likely consider offering a summer program again next year.

DiGiaocomandrea said one of the best parts of being involved in the summer children's production is involving more children in the CDC that usually sees the same kids auditioning for its for its plays.

"I hope they enjoy themselves and they'll want to come join us," for other shows throughout the year, she said.

The CDC summer production of Charlie and the Chocolate Factory will be held at Town Hall Friday, Aug. 6 at 10 a.m. and 7:30 p.m. and Saturday Aug. 7 at 1 and 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $10 and are available at Buttonwood Books in Shaw's plaza, the Front Street Book Shop in Scituate, as well as at the door.

Congratulations on the new name and thank you for introducing us to a new word and a definition!

Local artist gives gift of courage

very generous and close to $100,000 has been raised. She recently held a fund raiser at her farm in Marshfield and that day alone, she raised $7,500 for the cause. Green said every dollar donated goes toward buying a complete care package to be sent to a child free of charge.

Green said while she was in the process of writing and illustrating the book, she began doing research to see if she could find any books or materials geared at helping children learn to deal with the emotional side of an illness. As a cancer survivor and someone who has suffered from Lyme disease for the past 20 years, Green believes in the importance of positive thinking and looking to alternative methods of treatment to enhance what can be done with conventional medicine.

In addition, Green has a young relative, River Sage Dunn, who at just 7 years old, has been battling leukemia almost his entire life. He will be the first to be dubbed a knight of the magical moon when he receives his care package, and he and his family will be deciding where to send the first shipment of packages. When the children receive their packages, a tag will read, "From Sir River Sage Dunn: I present this gift to you, a fellow knight, in honor of your courage."

But it wasn't her personal experiences alone that led Green to write "The Velveteen Rabbit's Gift of Courage." About three years ago, Green received a phone call from a group of parents who were interested in purchasing a large amount of story books she had illustrated. Green had provided the illustrations for Marjorie William's "Velveteen Rabbit," and the heartfelt story struck a chord with the parents, who had all lost children to cancer. The parents ordered many copies of the story for a memorial service honoring children from 19 different families in their small town, who all lost their battles with cancer. The children had all become ill and passed away after playing on school grounds contaminated with illegally dumped toxic waste. The book was read during the service and many copies were handed out, and a butterfly was released in memory of each child at the end.

"The letters and calls that I got were very overwhelming," said Green, after the book was read at the service. The idea to somehow do more for children and families dealing with cancer kept "wearing" on her, and she finally decided she would do something. That is when she set out to write "The Velveteen Rabbit's Gift of Courage."

Green said while she is focusing on one project at a time, she does hope she will be able to help more children through the Magical Moon Foundation in the future.

"I love children, and all my books have been children's books," she said. Green hopes to one day be able to send care packages to children with cystic fibrosis, attention deficit disorder, cerebral palsy, and down syndrome. "Obstacles can be a blessing. They make you stronger," she said, adding it is important for children to know they are not alone. "It feels like it's going to be my mission."

"Even if we change one child's outcome by the way they approach their challenge, then it's worth it."

Callahan floats plan for town wastewater management

Affects local septic systems

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Cohasset's Comprehensive On-Site Wastewater Management Plan hasn't done anything for residents since its approval in 2000. Residents have not joined up to have the town maintain their septic systems, and the work done to draft the plan has been wasted.

However, Tom Callahan, a former selectman, is looking to revamp the plan, and has suggested taking it to Town Meeting, where voters would have to decide whether to allocate $3 million to get a new program started. With the backing of the Wastewater Committee, he is looking to change the way the town deals with its wastewater and bring some assistance to those homeowners with septic systems on their property.

For the past 18 months, members of the Wastewater Committee, which includes Steve Bobo, John Cavanaro, Joseph Godzik, Jim Dedes, Jeff Moy, Ann Swanborg, Vicky Neaves, and Raymond Kasperowicz., have been reviewing years of reports and studies, in the hopes of finding a way to manage wastewater more effectively in Cohasset. "We want to get a handle on all the work that's been done," said Cavanaro, adding there are about 30 years' worth of reports to go through.

Callahan presented his ideas for change to the board Tuesday and the committee agreed to include his suggestions in its report. The committee hopes to be able to report its findings to the Board of Selectmen in early September.

Callahan presented his ideas for change to the board Tuesday and the committee agreed to include his suggestions in its report.

Callahan said the town's current on-site wastewater plan — approved by both the Board of Health and the Department of Environmental Protection — does not work because in order to join, the homeowner must pass a Title 5 inspection. If their septic system fails, the homeowner is then forced to make the upgrade, which may be a cost the homeowner did not want or need to incur, if their current septic system was still in working order.

Callahan said he believes residents should be allowed to join "today, regardless of the condition of their system." A homeowner could opt into the program and pay the fee, which could be monthly or quarterly, and the town would then be responsible for the maintenance of the system. In the event the system one day fails, the town would pay the cost to upgrade the system. If the system needs to be pumped out or a pipe needs replacing, there would be no additional cost.

With Callahan's proposal, a homeowner could join when they needed to, or when they anticipate a change of property. Cavanaro suggested setting a timeframe a resident would need to participate in the program to ensure a homeowner doesn't sign up the day before their septic system fails, then expect the town to pick up the tab for a new system without having paid any dues.

Callahan said in order to get the program off the ground, the town would need some seed money to cover any repairs that need to be made at the beginning. The fees being paid by homeowners will begin to grow as time goes on, but with the average septic system overhaul in Cohasset costing at least $40,000, there will need to be a large pot of money for the town to reach into to start it off.

The specifics of the plan have not been worked out in great detail just yet, but Callahan hopes to have an article on the fall Special Town Meeting Warrant. He said he will be in touch with Town Counsel as he expects the article will be a bylaw change to amend the plan that already exists. Callahan said he could potentially bring the article forward as a citizen's petition, which would require collecting 100 signatures.

Cavanaro said the committee will be looking to finish up its report over the next few months, and Callahan's suggestions will be included.

to five years for reimbursement and were able to conduct short-term borrowing to cover payments until the state kicked in. But the effect of the delay meant property owners would have to shoulder the entire school building mortgage and interest payments from the end of short-term borrowing period, until the state reimbursement started.

Now, under the new law, all 420 school building projects will receive reimbursement within 3-1/2 years as opposed to up to 10 years. Cohasset's Deer Hill and middle-high school projects which are about one-third of the way down the list can expect a check in about two years.

This is good financial news for Cohasset for a couple of reasons, Buckley said.

The state will give the town a check for $26 million up front, rather than annual checks covering 60 percent of the principal and interest payments. That means the town will only have to borrow $16 million. In anticipation of the new law, Buckley said the town has already borrowed the $16 million and locked in a 4 percent interest rate just as interest rates were climbing.

Buckley said the town, which had put away some $2.1 million to help smooth out the anticipated bump years, can now plan with certainty and that money can possibly be used elsewhere. He said by receiving the money up front, the town borrows much less keeping the town further away from its debt limit.

Cohasset's Deer Hill and middle-high school projects which are about one-third way down the list can expect a check in about two years.

The new legislation created a new authority to oversee the state School Building Assistance program which will be funded through one cent of the state sales tax and authorizing bonds.

The state expects to clear all 420-plus projects on the waiting list – some $6 billion worth – within 3-1/2 years, according to state Deputy Treasurer Jeff Stearns. The state's share of those projects is about $4.2 billion. The revenue stream from the sales tax will pay reimbursement for projects that are currently receiving payments, like the new Osgood School, and will pay for future projects.

Currently there is a moratorium on new projects which is expected to be lifted in fiscal year 2008.

The town's $500,000 annual reimbursement checks for the $10 million Osgood School that opened in 1998 are not affected by the new legislation. That project started being reimbursed in fiscal year 2000 before the state funding crisis for school building assistance. The Osgood reimbursement checks will continue until 2019, Buckley said.

We'll make you smile.

OBITUARY

James F. Twigg

James F. Twigg, 85, of Rockland, a model train enthusiast, died August 1, 2004 at the Baypoint Nursing Home in Brockton after a long illness.

He was born in Norwood and lived in the South Shore area throughout his childhood. He joined the National Guard and the Merchant Marines before traveling to California in 1941. While taking flying lessons in December of that year, he learned that Peal Harbor had been bombed. Shortly after he returned to Massachusetts and joined the Coast Guard.

He married Eleanor MacLean in 1944 and moved to Scituate in 1948. He managed his own service station in Cohasset for a number of years and worked at Fitts' Mill and Anderson Fuel.

Always holding down two jobs, Mr. Twigg as also a special police officer in Scituate for 22 years. After retirement, he continued to work as a driver for the Scituate Senior Center.

A family man, he enjoyed camping, swimming and stories of his life adventures. He created an elaborate model train village in his home and could stump anyone with his knowledge of old movies. He and Eleanor also enjoyed traveling during their retirement visiting Hawaii, cruising in Alaska and taking a cross-country train trip to California. He always had a kind word, a helping hand and a smile on his face.

He leaves his wife of 60 years, Eleanor M. (MacLean), a son, Thomas L. of Marshfield, three daughters; Shirley A. McCormack of Newport Beach, Calif., Paula T. Blair of Johnstown, Penn., and Jeannette T. Brown of West Newton, his brother Richard W. of Scituate, eight grandchildren, eight great grandchildren and many friends. His sister Eleanor H. Johnson of Duxbury died last year.

A memorial service will be held Thursday, Aug. 12, at 11 a.m., at the First Congregational Church, Scituate.

Burial at Massachusetts National Cemetery in Bourne will be private.

DA holds training to prevent false identifications

Mistaken eyewitness identification is the leading cause of wrongful convictions, and local police are joining Norfolk District Attorney Bill Keating's first-in-the-state initiative to keep such mistakes from happening in Norfolk County.

"The people of Cohasset should be pleased with their police department's participation in this initiative."

— District Attorney Keating

Two Cohasset police officers were among more than 80 members of regional law enforcement at District Attorney Keating's seminar on implementing new eyewitness identification procedures shown to decrease the kind of false identifications that have sent innocent men to prison in Massachusetts and across the country.

"The people of Cohasset should be pleased with their police department's participation in this initiative," District Attorney Keating said. Cohasset attendees were Sgt. Gregory Lennon and Det. Garrett Hunt.

District Attorney Keating is asking all Norfolk County police departments to present suspects, or pictures of suspects, to witnesses one at a time – rather than simultaneous presentations which studies have shown can lead to a "best guess" responses. He is also asking that, whenever possible, departments use blind presentations. That is when the officer presenting suspects does not know which photo, or individual in a lineup, is under suspicion; this precludes the communication of even subliminal cues.

"These new procedures will save police the wasted effort of chasing false leads, build stronger cases for prosecutors and keep victims from making unwitting mistakes," Keating said. "Perhaps most importantly, with these new procedures the chances of an innocent person being accused drops precipitously."

The all-day seminar at Lombardo's in Randolph featured former US Attorney Deborah A. Ramirez, currently a law professor at Northeastern, and Harvard Professor Mahzarin R. Banaji, who addressed the cognitive science behind how poor procedures can prompt eyewitness mistakes.

Jennifer Thompson Cannino's personal story was riveting for anyone involved in the criminal system. Cannino lectures nationally on her experience as a rape victim whose mistaken identification led to the wrong man being incarcerated for seven years before DNA proved his innocence.

Applause!

Applause!

Those who think you have to leave the South Shore for a little culture weren't at the Music Circus for a first on Saturday night.

The sell-out crowd was treated to a concert featuring Keith Lockhart and the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra that demonstrated their ability to make "popular music classical" with tunes from Broadway shows.

The benefit performance, which kicked off the 50th anniversary year of the South Shore Art Center, thrilled the crowd that rose to its feet for a standing ovation on several occasions.

Despite the heat and humidity earlier in the day, a cool breeze circled the Big Top which provided the perfect venue for a summer concert to savor.

Adding her talented vocal chords to the orchestra was Faith Prince, Tony Award winner. And making her debut was Tracy Silva – winner of POPSearch 2004. Ms. Silva, a special education van driver from Taunton, could rival any contestant on American Idol.

Mr. Lockhart, who at 45 is in his 10th year as conductor of the Boston Pops, charmed his audience with gracious generosity that continually recognized the contribution of his orchestra, Ms. Prince and Ms. Silva.

Mr. Lockhart, who can also sing, and Ms. Prince brought the house down with a romantic rendition of "You're Just in Love" from the hit show, "Call Me Madam."

Before and after the performance, Mr. Lockhart was a special guest at receptions – one at a private home and the other at the art center — the proceeds of which will support the exhibition and education programs at the art center.

Recently we've covered the expansion of the South Shore Conservatory's Hingham campus which incorporates galleries to display art – including the works of artists from the South Shore Art Center — and lots of spaces for music education and performances.

On Saturday, we had the pleasure of attending both the Music Circus concert and the reception at the art center where Mr. Lockhart shared with guests that he and the Boston Pops may make Cohasset an annual stop on their busy calendar.

What some may not realize is the South Shore Music Circus is a common denominator in both the Conservatory project in Hingham and the Boston Pops benefit concert for the Art Center. The Music Circus has enthusiastically supported both educational, cultural organizations that add so much to life in our area.

While it's easy to think of the Music Circus – which celebrated its 50th anniversary a few years back – as purely a venue for summertime entertainment, the "theater in the round" through its parent South Shore Playhouse Associates makes many contributions behind the scenes that add to the fabric of our community.

The South Shore Playhouse Associates (SSPA) that also includes the Cape Cod Melody Tent is a not-for-profit company that supports arts and education in Southeastern Massachusetts. In the past decade, the SSPA has distributed more than $1.5 million to other local non-profit organizations including the Talking Information Center in Marshfield, the South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell, the Plymouth Philharmonic Orchestra and the Hingham Symphony Orchestra – to name a few.

We are fortunate to live in a place that treasures the arts and has organizations that step up to the plate and help them thrive.

We congratulate the South Shore Art Center on 50 years. And we applaud the Music Circus for helping to bring the Boston Pops to Cohasset, providing so many with an unforgettable evening for a great cause.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Awoken by plane arriving a Logan

TO THE EDITOR:

At 2 a.m. Wednesday I was awoken, like many of you I suspect, by a plane arriving Logan, powering over Cohasset at 3,000 feet and laying down a noise "shadow" of approximately 80-90 decibels. European research recently discovered that sleep is interrupted at levels as low as 33 decibels. In the dead of night, with low ambient noise levels, this intrusion is outrageous.

This airplane was following standard FAA operating procedures, which require all midnight to 6 a.m. flights to arrive, and depart over the South Shore. Arrivals on runway 33L take them directly over Cohasset, Hingham and Hull.

The 4:30 to 7 a.m. departures, which many of you are affected by, are required to be no lower than 6,000 feet when crossing our coastline, compared to Los Angeles, where planes are not allowed below 10,000 feet.

With federal laws protecting interstate commerce, citizens are powerless to effect change. It would be a simple matter for the Logan tower to vector departing aircraft further out over the water (there is plenty of airspace in the early morning hours), requiring a climb out to 12,000, or even 15,000 feet before turning over land. Because it might cost the operator a few extra dollars in fuel, they fail to do so.

We are working with Massport and the FAA to redirect arriving traffic over Boston Light, making a dogleg approach which is both easy and safe, according to Cohasset resident and professional airline captain (retired), Rod Hobson.

Our research indicates that the towns of Cohasset, Hingham and Hull already lie within the Logan significant impact zone, defined by the 55dB DNL contour (DNL means Day/Night Level, an average noise metric over a 24 hour period). Indeed, the entire peninsula of Hull is within the 60 to 65 dB DNL contour, with 65dB DNL being the point at which residential land use is no longer recommended by the FAA.

With the construction of the new runway, arrivals on 33L will triple, according to Massport's own data. The noise impact is forecasted to increase by 5 dB DNL, a five times increase in the total noise energy level (the scale is logarithmic, not arithmetic), making the entire town of Hull virtually uninhabitable, and severely impacting the quality of life in both Cohasset and Hingham. Indeed, all three towns would require insulation in every house under rules proposed by both the Cleveland and Minneapolis airports.

We recognize that we are powerless to deal with this situation through the courts, despite our collective efforts the last two years. In order to increase citizen awareness, we recommend that the selectmen in the three towns ask Massport to publish a map, using actual data from its 29 noise monitors (not modeled data), showing the existing 55 dB DNL contour, following the example set by the Raleigh/Durham airport. One showing the projected contour once the new runway is built would be useful as well. North Carolina state law requires property owners living in noise impact zones to disclose that fact when selling their homes. The real estate industry in the state is supportive, as clearly delineating the affected areas prevents any "failure to disclose" lawsuits.

Hook Little Harbor up to sewer system

TO THE EDITOR:

The following letter was sent to the Cohasset Board of Selectmen, with a copy to the Mariner for publication.

On behalf of the Board of Directors of CEES and the approximately 430 families in the Little Harbor/Atlantic Sewer District (LHASD), we strongly urge the selectmen to honor the existing commitments made by the town to the DEP and CEES to sewer the LHASD by 2009 as described in the schedule submitted to DEP on Feb. 4, 2004.

It is no more than simple equity and fairness to Cohasset citizens who have already paid for the available capacity. It is also the best way to protect Cohasset's fragile and endangered ecology. New applicants with new dwellings and new waste should not be connected to the central treatment facility until these commitments to existing citizens are met. Agreeing to connect new applicants with new dwellings will increase the legal risk and resulting substantial financial exposure to the Town. We believe there are many positive benefits for the town should the town continue to honor the commitments made over the last eight years to the DEP and CEES.

1. The DEP has indicated increasing concern as to the pace and potential uncertainty of outcome of final compliance with the Second Amended Judgment; the Town still risks being fined $10,000 per day. This Town-wide financial exposure pertains exclusively to LHASD and the reduction of existing documented pollution conditions, and not to any development homes yet to be built.

2. Even though developers would likely be willing to pay for connecting to the sewer system, short-term financial gain should not overshadow the overwhelming equity in favor of those LHASD homeowners who, as long-time taxpayers and current citizens of the Town, have waited patiently for the sewer resolution, have personally contributed financial support for various aspects of the engineering to date, and have overwhelmingly supported the recent sewering of the Lilly Pond and North districts.

3. Permitting, for instance, the Cook Estate project to tie in would set a dangerous precedent, putting the Town on the slippery slope for all other developers to claim rights to a finite amount of sewer capacity, with the result that LHASD could ultimately be denied all or some of its required access, and all of the citizens who have shared the cost to date of sewering the Town would see no additional benefit in pollution reduction. Since there continues to be a lack of consensus as to the real potential capacity of the existing plant, and since I&I issues periodically overwhelm the system anyway, it serves no purpose to claim that interim capacity given away to strangers will not affect future capacity availability for LHASD — this is not a gamble the LHASD citizens should be compelled to take.

4. The recent town funded studies of the Little Harbor area have indicated that tying in LHASD homes to the central plant is the most cost effective solution for complying with the Consent Decree. Those same studies indicated that a satellite plant would be significantly more expensive. Costs for sewering LHASD could be further reduced if the state bonds the amounts owed towns for reimbursement of school construction, since the town could take advantage of the favorable financing rates that are available today.

5. Delaying the schedule or canceling the schedule would create significant adverse financial impacts on LHASD citizens. The DEP has indicated to CEES members that if Cohasset meets the schedule all current addresses in the LHASD would not be subjected to upgrade or replacement of their systems (unless the system were judged to represent a public health risk) even if they failed prior to 2009 since sewering would resolve these failures. Should Cohasset not meet the schedule, citizens with failed systems would have to pay twice, first to put in a new septic system and second to connect to the sewer. This means a completely unnecessary expenditure that would average at least $40,000 per affected citizen.

Déjà vu: It's the same old story

TO THE EDITOR:

It seems a never-ending play. The plot has kids having an unlawful weekend party complete with trashing a house. With the 'rite of passage' mentality among some parents and the enabling going on in the schools we can be sure of catching reruns with minor changes in the story line.

Pollution detectives pick up some clues about bacteria

After collecting half a summer's worth of data, CSCR students and instructors working on the Gulf River study have identified several emerging trends. These analyses have led to preliminary conclusions as to where and how pollutants are entering the river's watershed. In addition, the institute hopes to strengthen a hypothesis that connects elevated pollution levels in Cohasset Harbor — specifically, at the popular swimming area at Bassing Beach – with pollution spikes in the Gulf River.

The lower reaches of the Gulf River have been consistently measured to be relatively clean compared to the upper reaches of the river. In its July 30 report to the Gulf of Maine Council, titled "Enterococci Monitoring in Cohasset Harbor," the CSCR noted that five of its six sampling sites do not meet the state's standard for swimming based on the sampling of enterococci bacteria. Under Chapter 111 of the Massachusetts Department of Public Health's code, water whose average colony count exceeds 35 colonies per 100 mL is unsafe to swim in. From the most downstream site to most upstream site, the CSCR-reported average colony counts per 100 mL were: 39.45, 24.27, 55.77, 38.77, 641.17, and 758.73. (Note: averages rounded to two significant decimal digits.)

Significantly, while five of six of the aforementioned sites are unsuitable for swimming, the two highest enterococci counts dwarf the others, suggesting the proximity of the pollution source to the former sites. These two sampling sites, located respectively on the east and west side of Gannett Road as it enters North Scituate Center, have also shown the highest levels of nitrate and nitrite compounds, which are introduced primarily through fertilizer runoff and septic system leakage. The east and west sites had respective geometric averages of 5.07 mg/L and 3.25 mg/L of nitrate and 0.177 mg/L and 0.118 mg/L of nitrite, double that of the other sampling sites.

While hardly conclusive, these reflections in the data suggest that the health of the Gulf River is strongly tied to the harbor's health, which is only logical given that the river is the largest water source in the Inner Harbor.

While it would be easy to conclude that the point source of pollution must be closer to the Gannett Road-North Scituate sites which have higher enterococci and nitrate/nitrite counts, additional testing is needed even further upstream to ensure that other environmental variables have not unduly influenced the data. Notably, the two sites with highest figures are located in a marsh environment, as opposed to the Musquashcut Brook and Gannett Road Bridge-Cohasset sites, whose environs are more aptly described as river tributaries. In these areas, tidal currents aerate the waters more frequently and more vigorously, whereas the North Scituate marsh musters at most a feeble current and often stands stagnant. Furthermore, tidal dilutions are much efficacious downstream, meaning that pollutants are more effectively neutralized or dispersed. A small amount of pollutant in North Scituate marsh will be present in a much higher concentration than the same amount released downstream due simply to the widening and deepening of the river.

The CSCR plans to conduct further testing upstream of the Gannett Road-North Scituate site to determine if the source of the effluent stems from even deeper within the watershed.

Another CSCR study, focusing on equivalent measurements in Cohasset Harbor, has provided invaluable correlation for the Gulf River study. Unsafe enterococci levels were recorded at only one of the four harbor sites – the Atlantica fishing pier – which supports the uncontested hypothesis that dilution would be much greater in the harbor than the river. In comparison to the Gulf, enterococci levels in the harbor varied between 13.95 colonies per 100 mL at the Cohasset Sailing Club's dock – the lowest – and 37.27 colonies per 100 mL at Atlantica – the highest. Most importantly, spikes in enterococci levels in the Gulf are mirrored in the simultaneous harbor readings. While hardly conclusive, these reflections in the data suggest that the health of the Gulf River is strongly tied to the harbor's health, which is only logical given that the river is the largest water source in the Inner Harbor.

A full and accurate statistical analysis of the correlation between the Gulf's effluent and the harbor is still under proposal and a complete model still needs to be realized, but the "Enterococci Monitoring in Cohasset Harbor" study's preliminary hypothesis was that "periodic spikes in counts in Cohasset Harbor (Bassing Beach) are due to contamination from the upper reaches of the Gulf River."

Convention of the stars

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

For a while there the other day I did not know who I was going to vote for next fall, John Kerry or Ben Affleck.

Honest, it seemed like there were so many movie people in Boston for the Democratic National Convention that I thought I was on the Riviera for the Cannes Film Festival.

There were so many celebs in town that the Herald's "Inside Track" had to hire extra agents to find out where they were eating and what they had for dinner, or "chowed down," as the Track girls would say.

Ben, who was last seen in these parts escorting his then-fiancé, J Lo, to a Red Sox game, apparently is using politics to forget J Lo, who dumped him when the Sox went into their annual losing streak. J Lo forgot him by marrying someone else.

Why is it always Democrats who are so attractive to women?

The matchmakers at the Herald, or was it Radio WRKO, tried to get something started between Ben and the Kerry girls, Vanessa and Alexandra, who, they said, elbowed each other out of the way to sit next to him.

Maybe they haven't heard about Ben's new love, Enza Sambataro. At least she was last week, I think. I haven't read the papers yet this morning. And Ben was off campaigning with John and John.

Of course, it wouldn't have been a Democratic convention if someone hadn't come up with the inside scoop on a candidate's affair, no matter how old or how unlikely.

Remember Bill Clinton and Gennifer Flowers? And Jack Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson and just about anyone wearing a skirt over the age of consent within the District of Columbia area code?

Why is it always Democrats who are so attractive to women? Why do I have difficulty calling up the image of George Bush, either one of them, renting a room by the hour at the No Tell Motel?

But I digress . . .

This time it was the National Inquirer that broke the story of John Kerry's red hot affair nearly 25 years ago with a woman lawyer who is now a judge. I ask you, why would a man who has dated Morgan Fairchild and Catherine Oxenberg, carry on with a woman judge?

The search for movie stars grew so heated that organizations sponsoring events held out the prospects of meeting one to lure visitors into their parlors.

The Friends of Hillary, hosting a reception for Bill and Hillary, built up attendance by hinting: "You might spot some celebs and VIPs, maybe Ted Danson and Mary Steenburgen, friends of the Clintons." I can't say if they showed up or not.

But Ben Affleck didn't. He was out at Fenway rooting for the Red Sox. I read it in the convention news the next day.

HEALTH NOTES

What you need to know about sump pumps

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Many dwellings in Cohasset have sump pumps. The sump pump is a mechanical device, which is generally located in a sump pit in the basement, and is used to reduce the pressure of groundwater near the dwelling's foundation and enable some ground water near the foundation to be discharged onto the surface or to a storm sewer system. In those areas that are adjacent to a water body, ravine, river, embankment or in areas that have a very high ground water table, it is necessary to connect the foundation drainage system to a more extensive storm service for the purpose of minimizing soil erosion.

Sump pump discharge

The sump removes water from a perforated pipe adjacent to the foundation walls designed to collect ground water, which flows to the sump pit. Once the water in the sump pit reaches a certain level, the sump pump starts and pumps the ground water through the discharge pipe.

The sump pump discharge pipe is usually located at the side of the house. In most areas, the sump pump discharge spills onto a splash pad, concrete sidewalk or through a flexible hose to a drainage swale.

It is important to provide a splash pad and/or a flexible hose below the discharge point. This helps minimize soil erosion at the foundation wall. The flexible hose and/or splash pad should be directed to adjacent drainage swales. And away from adjacent property. During the winter months, the sump pump discharge hose is susceptible to freezing, and consequent cellar backup. In such cases, it should be disconnected and discharge onto frozen ground carefully watched for erosion.

Do not hook up your sump drainage to the sanitary sewer system

Drainage tips

- Install an effective drainage system and keep eavestroughs and downspouts clean.
- Keep your drainage system clear so that water can move freely down and away from the side of your house.
- Attach extensions so that water is delivered at least 5 feet from the foundation.
- Make sure your downspouts and extensions don't leak.
- Disconnect any downspout connections that drain directly into the sanitary sewer system. These connections are illegal. If they discharge into an onsite system, they may damage the system and render it ineffective.
- Grade and landscape your lot to move water away from the house.
- Ensure a positive slope away from the wall for at least the first 5 feet. The ground should drop a minimum of 3 inches in this area.
- Use landscaping to disperse the water more evenly.
- Seal the crack between your house and your driveway.

If you have a sump pump:

- Maintain your approved lot grade plan. Do not change this plan when you landscape your property. Sump pump pipes should discharge water at least 5 feet from the foundation wall.
- If your sump pump discharges on the ground, place a splash pad below where the sump pump discharge pipe comes through the foundation wall.
- Use long pipes to drain away sump pump discharge. A flexible hose with holes works well to distribute the water on your property.
- Slope the ground below the discharge pipe down and away from the foundation wall at a minimum of a 5 per cent grade
- Never turn off your sump pump.
- Do not hook up your sump drainage to the sanitary sewer system. The sanitary sewer system is designed to manage normal flows of sewage, not rainwater or water from sump pumps.
- It is dangerous to drain sump water onto the sidewalk. The resulting algae build-up and slippery surface can set up a liability issue for the homeowner as well the County.
- Consider a backup battery system for your sump pump in case of power outages.

Why is it important to keep storm water out of the sanitary sewer system?

- Unauthorized connections put more water into the sanitary sewer system than it is designed to handle. This increases the risk of sewage backup and basement flooding.
- Environmental and health concerns escalate when the sanitary sewer system is overtaxed.
- Sewage may not be treated as effectively.
- Raw sewage may be diverted into the river or holding areas.

This show is great for the young families but will also appeal to the older children. The winner of the "Create a Chameleon" contest will be awarded prizes prior to the show. This is the last show of the summer season.

Summer reading ends

The summer reading program, "explore other worlds @ your library!" officially ends on Aug. 16. Students who have successfully completed their goal should bring their reading logs to Mrs. Moody beginning Monday, Aug. 16, to receive their incentive. Mrs. Moody's hours will be Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Wireless access

The library now offers wireless Internet access for patrons with laptop computers.

Safe child policy

The library attempts to provide a safe environment for children of all ages. Yet, because the library is a public building, parents and caregivers should use discretion in determining when their children are mature enough to use the library unsupervised.

Children must be picked up prior to closing. The library staff is not responsible for supervising children left alone when the library is closed, but will make attempts to reach a parent or caregiver for immediate pick-up. If staff members cannot reach a parent or caregiver within one half hour of closing, they will notify the police, who will assume responsibility for the child.

South Shore Art Center gallery artist, Ted Polomis, presents an exhibition of oil paintings at the library until Aug. 30. The show features a variety of intimate still lifes and studies painted in the tradition of classical realism.

FROM LETTERS, PAGE 12

The cast of characters over the decades changes, unfortunately becoming younger. But the plot is always the same.

The sets in town have gotten more elaborate in the last few years. The taxpayers have invested $52 million into school renovations, $1 million for a new athletic field and track, $500,000 for new Little League fields and $4 million in a new state-of-the-art library. They have provided buildings and financing for a teen center and a marine center.

The lines sure haven't improved with age. It is the same old theme of 'nothing to do here.'

The shock and outrage is another constant.

Maybe it's time to go back to teaching respect, self-control and responsibility to the children, setting the limits, enforcing the rules and having parents, schools and police on the same page. Pounding our chests, gnashing our teeth, putting in more programs and spending more money hasn't appeared to have done the trick yet.

History repeats and repeats and repeats itself in our tiny metropolis but some of us still haven't been able to learn its lesson

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

A pep rally for a son of Massachusetts concluded successfully – though not everyone felt they shared in the success, or even that there was a success to share. Democrats nationally seemed extremely happy with how it all went — the message got out, the city stayed safe, and the celebrity political culture pronounced itself pleased with Boston.

The most important perspective in the minds of the rally's organizers was the one on TV — especially TV sets in 18 battleground states where this race is very close among undecided voters. By this standard, success was exquisitely measurable, and will be measured most meticulously, in swing-state surveys from New Hampshire to Washington. Early returns seemed encouraging for the Democrats, who needed an 8-to-12 point bounce from the Fleet Center proceedings to feel good about the week.

Locally, the conclusions, like the experience, were much more mixed. Those with the right credentials and the right invitations had a great time (and, truth be told, it was all quite fabulous if one had those). But it was clear that the pleasures and benefits of the convention were not distributed, to be succinct, democratically.

One group could unambiguously credit itself with a good week — the State Police, whose mission was to keep disruption and disorder to a minimum and who could say, if the phrase may be permitted: "Mission Accomplished."

On the other hand, it became apparent as the week progressed that the attractiveness of the pageant improved with distance, and locals seemed to get the worst of it. A good television presentation requires a tight script and stringent choreography, and that means constraining people's behavior. That the organizers certainly did, with lots of fencing, barriers and personnel who told everyone where they could and could not go and what they could and could not do.

There was no role for ordinary Bostonians to play in the convention, other than to get out of the way. That they did in such numbers that earlier fears about traffic vanished, but the mayor was forced to announce a series of steps to bring everyone missing from stores and restaurants back into the city over the weekend.

At first blush, it seemed deeply doubtful the event represented the promised bonanza for the business community, though in the long run Boston may have been placed in a good enough light that tourism will benefit. Success on the economic level will be measured in dollars, though estimates of the damage or benefit may vary as widely — lunch shops didn't fare as well as fine dining establishments, for example — as did the projections going into convention week.

The gulf between the national governing elite and the long-suffering locals was never clearer than at 9:18 p.m. Thursday, about half an hour after the Fleet Center had been declared closed.

Former state Sen. Warren Tolman, a candidate for governor in 2002 and the party's nominee for Massachusetts lieutenant governor in 1998, stood outside the Gate B entrance talking to a harried but composed Boston police sergeant. Tolman was one of the very many to whom the sergeant explained that nobody, absolutely nobody, could pull enough rank or proffer a sufficiently urgent reason to override the fire marshall's order and get in the building.

"I've got $30,000 worth of radio equipment just sitting there," pleaded Kerianne Rodigues of WTAG in Worcester, replied the sergeant: "I've got a guy sitting on a train platform (in North Station) with a $50,000 seat, and he's not to going to be able to get back to it." Gesturing to Tolman, the sergeant told Rodrigues and the rest of the unhappy crowd: "I'm sure the Senator would like to get in."

It was at that exact moment that a grinning US Sen. Christopher Dodd and a dozen of his entourage breezed by the sergeant, 20 of the black-uniformed officers enforcing the order, and the men guarding the door. Dodd and his nicely-dressed attendants moved smoothly toward the inside of the hall, the focus on public safety and the fire marshal's orders superseded by other considerations.

The scene, like the week, was tough on the locals. But ultimately, for the city's most important resident – John Kerry – it seemed to be a week that worked. As he savored a shining special moment, thousands of less visible, and in large part less willing, participants were just grateful to have such moments over with and normality return.

The most important role the State House played last week was 1. Visual 2. Staging area for the State Police; Gardner Auditorium looked like a barracks Thursday evening, awash in black uniforms as Kerry prepared to speak 10 blocks away. Nonetheless, as always there was at least some news to report:

• SJC ruling means indigent defendants could go free — Indigent defendants accused of crimes must be released after seven days if no lawyer is willing to defend them, the Supreme Judicial Court ruled. The issue is at the forefront because of the Legislature's failure to raise the hourly rate of pay for bar advocates. The situation has lawyers avoiding the public-counsel system in great numbers, causing a shortage of court-appointed attorneys. The Legislature now faces the choice of raising rates, or seeing accused criminals set free.

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for more than 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on five roll calls and local senators' votes on seven roll calls from recent sessions.

Senator Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) (617) 722-1646 Room 413F

SCHOOL BUILDING ASSISTANCE (H 4977)

House 156-0, Senate 38-0, gave final approval to and Gov. Romney signed into law a bill making major changes in the state's program that provides funding for cities and towns to renovate old school buildings and build new ones. The proposal takes the program away from the state's education department and creates a new independent authority, chaired by the state treasurer, to administer it. It also phases in over a six-year period the dedication of a penny of the state's five-cents per dollar sales tax to fund the building projects and places a three-year moratorium on any new projects that are not already approved. Supporters said the current program is an underfunded failure that has created a huge backlog of some 425 projects on a waiting list. They argued that this long overdue reform would benefit local communities and their students, clear the waiting list in 3.5 years and create many construction jobs. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).

Senator: Y Representative: Y

$1.3 MILLION FOR ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES CONTROL COMMISSION (H 4850)

House 153-0, Senate 35-2, overrode Gov. Romney's $1.3 million veto reduction (from $1.8 million to $500,000) in funding for the administration of the Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission (ABCC). Last year, the Legislature transferred control of the ABCC from the governor's administration to the office of State Treasurer Tim Cahill. The ABCC enforces the state's liquor laws and regulations related to manufacturing, importing, exporting, storing, transporting and selling alcoholic beverages. Override supporters said the $1.3 million is necessary in order for the commission to do its job overseeing, monitoring and investigating the liquor industry in Massachusetts. In his veto message, the governor said that he reduced the funding to the amount that he recommended in his original budget. (A "Yea" vote is for the $1.3 million. A "Nay" vote is against the $1.3 million).

Senator: N Representative: Y

$1 MILLION FOR BOSTON MUNICIPAL COURT (H 4850)

House 111-45, Senate 25-12, overrode Gov. Romney's $1 million veto reduction (from $3.1 million to $2.1 million) in funding for the Boston Municipal Court (BMC). Override supporters said the BMC is a unique and well-run court with a large caseload that requires this additional funding. They argued that other courts could take lessons from the way the BMC is run. Override opponents said the BMC is a patronage-filled court loaded with waste and inefficiency. They argued that its caseload does not justify its excessive funding and said that it drains resources that other courts could use. (A "Yea" vote is for the $1 million. A "Nay" vote is against the $1 million)

Senator: N Representative: Y

$50,000 FOR ANTI-TERRORISM COMMISSION (H 4850)

House 134-22, Senate 34-4, overrode Gov. Romney's veto of $50,000 for a newly created, five-member State Resilience Development and Anti-Terrorism Commission to research, develop and coordinate state and local disaster response programs. The commission's agenda would include programs to ensure public adherence to disaster contingency plans, train teachers to help students during a disaster and ensure that first responders have the appropriate tools to respond to disasters. Override supporters said this commission would be invaluable in this post 911 era by coordinating the efforts of the many local and state agencies that would be involved in responding to the physical and psychological consequences of terrorist attacks and other disasters. In his veto message, the governor said he vetoed the funding because the program was not recommended. The governor's veto also struck $25,000 for a police patrol for the town of Milton. (A "Yea" vote is for the $50,000 for the commission and $25,000 for a Milton police patrol. A "Nay" vote is against the funding).

$2.3 MILLION FOR STATE POLICE PATROLS (H 4850)

House 147-10, Senate 37-1, overrode Gov. Romney's veto of $2.3 million in funding for additional state police patrols at various locations in the state. The funding includes language, also vetoed by the governor, providing that each community that received this funding last year would also receive the same funding this year. Override supporters said these funds are earmarked for patrols for specific cities and towns in response to legislators who have expressed public safety concerns and want to see high-risk areas in their communities patrolled. They argued the increased patrols would help reduce crime and protect people. Override opponents asked why these favored communities are being singled out for additional patrols while others are not. They argued that public safety professionals, not the Legislature, should decide and implement public safety strategy. (A "Yea" vote is for the $2.3. A "Nay" vote is against it).

Senator: Y Representative: Y

FIRE SAFETY LAWS (H 4550)

Senate 38-0, gave near final approval to a bill making major changes to the state's fire safety laws. The legislation requires bars and nightclubs that hold more than 100 people to install a state-approved system of automatic sprinklers and offers a tax depreciation deduction for the costs. The measure also provides $10 million for a firefighting equipment grant program for local fire departments; $450,000 to educate and certify all municipal fire and building inspectors; and $1.078 million in local grants for student awareness of fire education (SAFE) programs that include information about the fire risks caused by smoking. Other provisions increase the penalties for violating some provisions of the state's fire safety laws. Supporters said this bill was filed following the Rhode Island nightclub fire that killed 100 people. They argued that this long overdue overhaul of the state's antiquated fire safety laws would protect people and save lives. The House has approved a different version of the bill including a provision that requires bars and nightclubs that hold more than 50, rather than 100 people, to install automatic sprinklers. The Senate version now goes to the House for consideration. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).

Senator: Y

THRESHOLD FOR AUTOMATIC SPRINKLERS IN BARS AND NIGHTCLUBS (H 4550)

Senate 22-16, approved a fire safety bill amendment increasing from 50 people to 100 people, the minimum capacity at which bars and nightclubs would be required to install automatic sprinklers. Amendment supporters said the 100-person capacity is a reasonable compromise that would protect the public and still be fair to small businesses that cannot afford this state mandate. They noted that fire safety personnel have indicated that the 100-person capacity is acceptable. Amendment opponents said the increase would water down the bill and increase the risks to the customers of these clubs. They argued that it would cost the typical bar only $4000 to install a sprinkler system and noted the legislation offers a tax depreciation deduction for the costs. They argued that the small cost to businesses does not compare to the huge costs of the potential loss of human life if the bill is watered down. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment increasing from 50 people to 100 people, the minimum capacity at which bars and nightclubs would be required to install automatic sprinklers. A "Nay" vote is for keeping the capacity at 50).

Local Democrats wowed by the Kerry-Edwards ticket

Get charged up at DNC party

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Enthusiastic South Shore Democrats held their own grassroots version of the Democratic National Convention in Hingham. Their high spirits matched the exuberance of the Boston convention.

The first-of-its-kind event was sponsored by the Hingham Democratic Town Committee, the Plymouth County Democratic League, and the South Shore town committees that comprise "Coop 8."

Last Thursday, the Sons of Italy Hall on Rte. 3A was full of Kerry supporters from Hingham, Cohasset, Weymouth, Plymouth, Hanover, Pembroke, and other communities wearing "delegate" nametags who shared the excitement of the 2004 presidential race with other local Democrats.

The room was decorated with signs bearing slogans such as: "Friends don't let friends vote Republican"; "Kerry and Edwards, a stronger America"; "Help Save Medicare and Social Security"; "Democrats gave us FDR, HST, JFK, LBJ, Carter, and Clinton. Great men — add Kerry"; and "Economic prosperity that is fair."

The pumped-up crowd, ranging from teenagers to longtime Democrats, watched closely and listened intently to the live coverage on a large-screen TV, including the speeches confidently presented by Kerry backers, family members, and finally Kerry himself.

Hingham resident Roy Harris was glad to take a seat and enjoy the festivities. He recalled another Democratic National Convention nearly four decades ago that posed more of a challenge for him.

"I covered the DNC in Chicago for the Los Angeles Times in 1968 as a recent college graduate serving as an intern," he recalled. Because he wasn't a regular reporter, Harris was assigned to cover the street scene rather than the DNC, which was where all the excitement was expected to take place. However, the activities of anti-war protestors and political activists such as Abbie Hoffman and Jerry Rubin changed all that.

"As the convention went on, more of the reporters wanted to cover the street scene, because that's where all the action was," Harris recalled. "The street scene became the main story rather than the convention."

During the excitement, Harris was clubbed by a police officer following a demonstration, after which he received a telegram from the editor of the Times protesting the incident. "I also helped bail a reporter out of jail who refused to leave the Conrad-Hilton Hotel lobby when the area was being cleared out," he said.

Harris' wife, Eileen McIntyre, was wearing a "McCarthy" scarf that she wore in 1968. "That was the last campaign I was involved with until Howard Dean," she said.

McIntyre met Susan Haley and Debbie Ludwig, both of Hingham, while working as a Dean volunteer. "We met each other at a Dean meet-up at the Braintree Borders bookstore, where campaign workers learned ways to get people to write letters in support of Dean," McIntyre said.

A Dean volunteer encouraged the three women to get involved with the Hingham Democratic Town Committee (HDTC) in order to "make change happen."

"We all showed up at a the same HDTC meeting independently and then realized we all knew each other," McIntyre said. "It was wonderful." McIntyre is now the HDTC vice-chairman and Haley the committee's affirmative action officer.

"I think it's really important to involve people who have progressive ideas – at their own comfort level," Haley said. "You don't necessarily have to make phone calls or knock on doors."

Haley said last week's Hingham DNC event was a reflection of the "meet-ups" Dean was known for. "We're now applying all we learned from the Dean campaign to the Kerry campaign," she said. "We're not just fund raising but getting the message out about the issues."

"We shouldn't be afraid of politics," McIntyre said. "As an individual we can make a difference." She further noted that in the past, many single women of all ages felt for some reason that their vote didn't matter. Women matter a great deal."

McIntyre wants to help get that word out. "A few hundred votes would have made a difference in Florida," she said, referring to the recount that resulted in a Gore loss and a Bush victory.

McIntrye thinks Kerry is capable of winning the election. "People can relate to the Democratic ideals, which have grown past the image of liberalism that the mainstream couldn't relate to — to one that is built on the basic principle that we care about people outside of the house we live in and that a diverse society makes us all better," she said.

Dorothy Keville, formerly of Cohasset, made an impression on the three new friends. "She ran the Dean volunteer effort for the state and went to Iowa," Haley said. "She provided us with strategies and encouraged our involvement."

The fund raiser featured a raffle that included a John Kerry jacket; a political memorabilia table; and a hotdog and baked bean supper prepared and served under the affable direction of Gary Ludwig. Not surprisingly, there was Heinz ketchup on the table.

Sasha Codero and Andria Ludwig, both teenagers, helped set up for the event, blew up balloons, and manned the bake table, which featured cookies baked from Teresa Heinz Kerry and Hillary Clinton recipes. Both young women are Kerry supporters.

"We need a different approach from war," Sasha said. "I'm concerned about the soldiers who have died and a friend who lost a family member. I'm also appalled by the allegations made by the current administration about Sept. 11, including weapons of mass destruction. We need full disclosure from the government."

Andria thinks its time for a change, too. "I don't want to be [stuck] paying off the current administration's debts," she said. "I want to know that I'll have health care and Social Security benefits when I get older. I think Kerry will lead us in a better direction, making it easier for young people to attend state colleges and for low-income people to live in America. Kerry speaks for the people who are struggling and need a voice."

The money raised from the event supports Democrat-sponsored "Get Out the Vote" activities in local communities this fall.

The room was festively decorated to give the feel of the national convention floor – with red, white, and blue balloons, blue tablecloths, miniature American flags adorning the hotdogs and snack trays, and gaily wrapped baked goods.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, had a ticket to the DNC that evening but "wanted to share this event with you instead," he announced to the crowd. "The Kerry campaign is a big tent and we're happy to have everyone involved. It's the most important election in this generation."

Bradley said he noticed at a DNC event he attended earlier in the week that "when Clinton came into the room, it was just like Elvis. You can feel the energy as he walks by."

The evening began with a live conference call with John Edwards, John Kerry's running mate, addressing grass roots gatherings across the United States. Edwards, the son of a mill worker, encouraged Democrats to "reach out to the people and raise money, or we can't do what we want to do for our country. You're already making a difference in spreading a message of hope. We need to be inspired to lift our country up and to get on the right track so we're proud to be Americans again."

Cheers went up as Kerry stepped up to the podium to accept the Democratic nomination for President, saluted, and said: "I'm John Kerry and I'm reporting for duty!" He went on to deliver a compelling speech focusing on "America can do better – help is on the way. . . . Our best days are still to come."

Backers at the Hingham event waved Kerry and Edwards signs and ones bearing the slogan, "America's future – Kerry-Edwards 2004."

"We're here tonight because we love our country and are proud of what it is and what it can become," Kerry said, noting with humor, "I'm not one to read into things, but I was born in the west wing of an Army hospital."

On a more serious note, Kerry, who is a Vietnam veteran, said that "as President, we will never go to war because we want to – only because we have to . . . when we have no choice. I know what kids go through carrying M16s in a dangerous place and writing letters home saying that everything is all right when they're not sure that's true."

After Kerry officially accepted the nomination, former Dean supporter Jim Watson from Hingham said good-naturedly, "Okay, we're conceding," and put his Dean campaign button in his shirt pocket.

The evening ended with remarks by HDTC Chairman Thomas Vangel. "Ten years ago someone asked me if we had enough Democrats in Hingham to put together a town committee," he said. "We've come a long way since then. We have to energize people. Let's get the White House back and restore credibility and values to this country. We can't allow our children and grandchildren to be left with the legacy that four more years of this administration will leave them with."

Vangel was encouraged to see "a lot of young blood in our Democratic family. They are the future of the party and country."

According to the DNC Web site, the recent Boston convention brought together more than 4,300 delegates and 600 alternates representing each of the 50 states, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, American Samoa, Guam, the Virgin Islands, and Democrats Abroad. In all, there were about 35,000 attendees, including 15,000 members of the media and 15,000 other guests including elected officials and foreign dignitaries.

For more information about local Democratic activities, visit SouthShoreDemocrats.Org. The Web page is designed to bring members of the party together to unite them in their common endeavors.

The Republican National Convention will be held at Madison Square Garden in New York City from Aug. 30-Sept. 2.

Historic NE photos on exhibit in Hull

The Hull Lifesaving Museum and the Society for the Preservation of New England Antiquities is hosting "The Camera's Coast" a sampler of historic coastal New England images from the collections of Society for the Preservation of New England Antiquities through Sept. 5. The pioneering photographers represented from SPNEA include Nathaniel Stebbins, Henry G. Peabody, Baldwin Coolidge, and Emma Coleman. Subjects depicted include square-riggers, coasting schooners, fishing vessels and fishing ports, small boats and large yachts, summer hotels and fishermen's shacks, fishermen, seaweed gatherers, and saltmarsh haymakers.

Curated by noted author and maritime historian William H. Bunting, "The Camera's Coast" illustrates life along the New England coast in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. These were years of great social and economic change. Many traditional maritime occupations, from long-shore fishing and shipbuilding to deep water voyaging were in decline. With mushrooming industrialism and growing numbers of people able to take vacations – and increasingly hot, crowded, and dirty cities from which to flee – coastal recreation boomed.

Upswing seems likely

Strong returning cast has Post 118 baseball eyeing much better things in '05

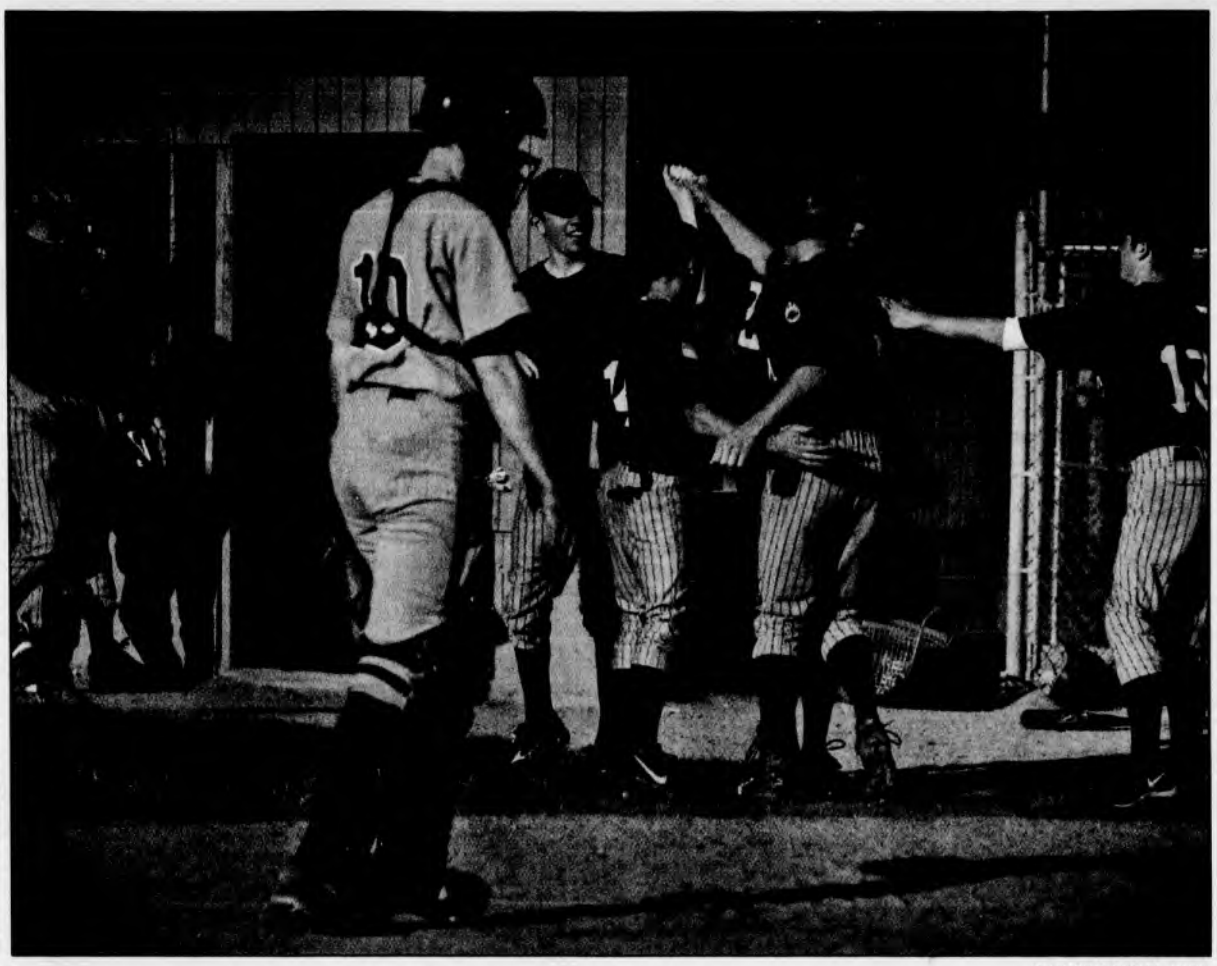
By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

You've all heard variations of this old joke.

The good news is the GH Mealy Cohasset Post 118 Legion baseball team can return all but three players next summer. The bad news is the GH Mealy Cohasset Post 118 Legion baseball team can return all but three players next summer.

Well forget it.

Sure, there might be a few wise guys out there spouting this sentiment after the Post 118 team won just two games all summer. But a considerable upgrade next season seems all but certain. There's simply too much baseball talent in the towns of Cohasset and Scituate for that not to happen.



And floating at the top of that talent pool is the number of promising younger players who performed in key roles this summer for the 118ers...really.

"It was a tough season, but the upside was we got a lot of players in there who have a year or two or more of eligibility left, and that will only help," said Coach Mike Duggan. "There is baseball talent there. A lot of it this year was just young. But most of those guys are a lot better prepared after the experience they got this year."

Scott Carroll, the team's starting shortstop and leading hitter, graduated from Scituate High in June and will be heading at the end of this month to Union College, where he was recruited to play baseball. However, he is eligible to return next season.

No more Nomar a no brainer

MIKE SPELLMAN

We had a dream.

This particular flight of fancy featured our beloved Nomar being there front and center when the Sox finally reversed The Curse. But it wasn't to be. And, in the final analysis, that was of Nomar's choosing.

I hate to say it-- and not just because I appear to be flip-flopping...er, "spin managing" faster than our junior Senator in a room full of conservatives holding key swing votes in their hip pockets-- but the Red Sox braintrust did absolutely the right thing in trading Nomar on deadline Saturday.

No one was a bigger fan of Nomar's than this typist. He earned my respect and admiration with the way he played the game, and my adoration with all of the big hits he delivered over the years, but it was his actions away from the field that as good as punched his ticket out of town. In fact, it's becoming more and more plausible that there were actions that kept him away from that field.

In the end, the only rationale for keeping Nomar was the hope that he would lift us to a World Series crown this year, for we were all pretty much resigned to the fact there'd be no more Nomar beyond this season.

In the end, that simply wasn't enough to fend off the forces of common sense.

Many of my fellow longtime Nomar supporters are griping that the Sox didn't get nearly enough for the likely first ballot Hall-of-Famer. That was my first reaction too. Then I cooled off and considered more closely: a) the fact that he's in the last year of his contract, b) his Achilles may be a legitimate long term concern, and c) the short list of teams that could use him now and actually afford to keep him beyond this season.

Then there is the question as to whether or not he was having a negative affect on the team's chemistry and general locker room mood. I don't want to believe the assertions made by many that this was the case, but it's difficult to ignore the dead-on impression Nomar was doing of Munster's family butler Lurch

Riding for a cure

Nine Cohasset residents to ride in 25th annual Pan-Mass Challenge this weekend

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

A total of nine residents from Cohasset will ride in the 25th annual Pan-Massachusetts Challenge (PMC), the nation's most successful bike-a-thon for charity, on Aug. 7 and 8.

Alone or in teams, athletes or amateurs, strong or weak, they ride to accomplish a single, unified goal - a world without cancer.

The Cohasset riders are Guy Oliver, Robert Allen, Mary Allen, Michael Kearney, Michele Sacks, Ron Sacks, Peter Vitello, Robert Mahoney and Susan McMackin.

Michael Kearney-- who lost his sister, Mary Beth, to breast cancer in 2000-- will be teaming with Mahoney and Hingham's John Sullivan on the one day Wellesley-to-Bourne 89-mile ride.

"I am riding to honor (Mary Beth) and what she meant to all of us who knew her," said Kearney. "I have thought of my sister every day since the day she died of breast cancer. Although these fond memories of her are very comforting, these remembrances are like any memento: they seem to fade with the passage of time.

"I hope and pray for a cure in the foreseeable future so that others are able to hold onto more than just memories of their mother, spouse, sibling or friend. I am confident that the funds raised by the PMC and donated to the Dana Farber will help realize that goal."

Kearney made the 192-mile two day Sturbridge-to-Provincetown trek in 2001 with Robert Mahoney, but switched to the one day ride his second time around. He smiles when he explains the reason behind this.

"I got Robert and I lost a couple of times on the ride in 2001," said Kearney, who's been doing 20 mile training rides for the last month and did a final 45-mile tune-up this past Sunday. "The one day ride this year limits my ability to get him lost again. In spite of a well marked route, a human compass I am not."

Robert Mahoney, in his second go round with the PMC, is making the Wellesley to Bourne run with Kearney.

"Once again, as seems to be the case more and more, I have had people very close to me afflicted with cancer over the past 12 months," he said. "Hopefully I am a small part of some greater good here, and, in that, there is personal satisfaction."

This will be the third ride for Bob Allen. He made the big ride in 2002 and '03, Sturbridge to P-town, but he's being joined by wife Mary (a PMC volunteer the last two years) this year, and the couple will do the shorter two day Wellesley-Bourne-Wellesley run.

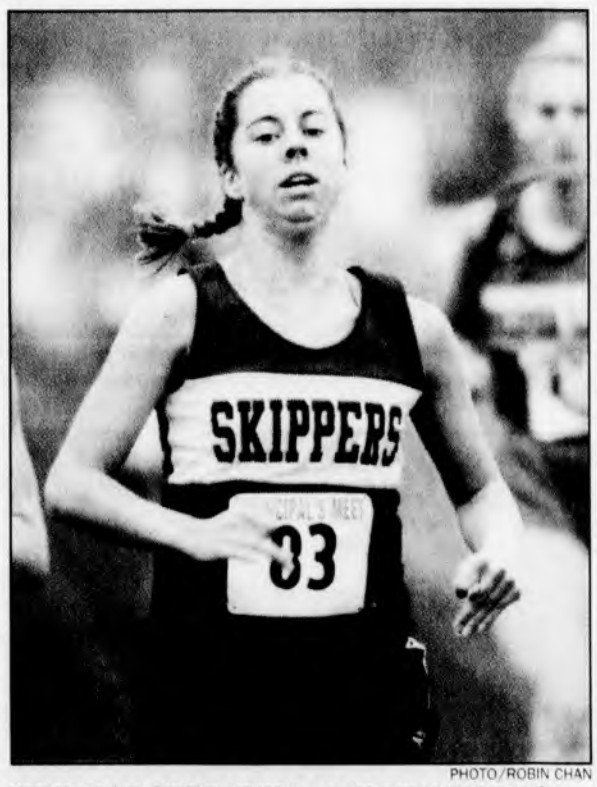
All-Scholastic girls track team

Cohasset's Buckley, 4x800 relay squad named among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Several of the young women you see listed below as "Honorable Mentions" received serious consideration for All-Scholastic acknowledgement.



In the end, however, we limited ourselves to a team of just 15 girls, and, after consulting with area coaches, we do feel secure that we chose the top female track athletes in Marinerland for this honor:

Jenn Buckley - Senior (Capt.)
800/Javelin - Cohasset

Jenn Buckley

Jenn makes it a perfect sweep for her senior year, having previously earned Mariner All-Scholastic honors in soccer and basketball...A six time Mariner All-Scholastic for her high school career, earning the honor twice for soccer and now three times in track...placed seventh in the 800 at the state Class D meet with a career best 2:28.21...also placed 10th in the javelin with a throw of 94-feet-11-inches...best throw of season was 100-9...versatility is her leading attribute, as witnessed by her team best point total in duel meets...also qualified for state's in the mile (best of 5:38), and was a regular point scorer in duel meets in the discus (best of 78-feet)... placed fifth in 800 at South Shore Principals meet (2:24.58)...South Shore League all-star...anchored the 4x800 relay team that also earns All-Scholastic honors here...involved in chorus at CHS...plans to major in Nursing at Northeastern University...collegiate athletics are not a priority, but will remain active in intramural sports...Cohasset coach Al LaFountain: "Replacing someone like Jenn seems almost impossible to comprehend. She does so many things well, and was such a great leader."

for most of his 50 plus games through Saturday and still write off to coincidence the obvious and dramatic disparity between team spirit this year and last.

I'm taking a wait and listen stance in regards to the allegations that Nomar was exaggerating the severity of his injury in order to get out of playing. I do believe he was looking first and foremost at his long term physical and, yes, financial considerations, perhaps even placing these ahead of team considerations--hardly a shock in the day of the modern professional athlete. To accuse him of downright faking the injury in order to get even with Sox ownership, though, is a stretch that is totally unjustified. The remarks Nomar made to Larry Lucchino in that farewell phone conversation Saturday night, if they were made at all at the Sox Vice President reported, were indeed petulant and immature—again, hardly a shock coming from a professional athlete—but we shouldn't read much more into it than that.

Getting back to the relative wisdom of the trade, one last thing it is difficult to dismiss is the fact the Sox had played sub-.500 ball since Nomar's return.

Cast in the light of all these econsiderations, Orlando Cabrera, a former Gold Glove shortstop and team MVP two of the last three years on the same Montreal Expos team that had Vlad Guererro, and Gold Glove first baseman Doug Mientkiewicz doesn't look all that bad.

If Braintree wasn't already considered The Baseball Town in our subscriber area, there should no longer be any room whatsoever for debate.

In the final week of July, Braintree's Legion, Senior Babe Ruth, Cranberry League and 11- and 12-year old Little League all-star teams were still playing for a state title.

Baseball is king in Braintree, and Braintree is most certainly king of the sport in Marinerland.

Of course, Scituate's 14-year old all-stars winning the state Junior League baseball championship is still a pretty cool story too.

The sudden retirement of Ricky Williams, 27, from the NFL this weekend came as a shock to many. It probably shouldn't have.

No one who receives a paycheck playing professional sports takes a beating, either physical and mental, that comes even close to comparing to what is endured by today's "all purpose backs," such as Ricky.

And no one from this select group took near as many hits as Ricky has over the last two years.

Williams made his money, and now he's chosen to walk away rather than limp, or worse, away.

How can anyone criticize him for that?

Of course, as a diehard member of Patriots nation, my perception may be slightly skewed.

Naughty role models

I know I stopped thinking of athletes as role models a long, loooong time ago. So I guess I just lost sight of how much youngsters still hold them up as the ideal.

I got a harsh reminder on Sunday afternoon when I was tossing a wiffle ball in to my six-year old. Well, after a poorly aimed throw plunked him off the head, my first year T-Ball alum told me we had to fight. He then dropped the bat, charged me and started swinging playfully.

It took me a few seconds before I caught on… the extracurricular activities in Saturday afternoon's Red Sox-Yankees game. D'oh!

Naturally, I laughed heartily. It didn't take long, though, before I switched over the coach/dad mode and explained to him that those players on TV were acting like idiots and how real baseball players never fight.

So take this as a friendly reminder parents: Be on your toes. You never know from where those influences are going to come.

Mike Spellman is the Sports Editor for the Cohasset, Kingston, Norwell, Pembroke and Scituate Mariners, as well as the Braintree Forum and Holbrook Sun. He can be reached by e-mail at mspellman@cnc.com.

This will be the third ride for Bob Allen. He made the big ride– Sturbridge to Provincetown—the previous two years, but he's being joined by wife Mary (a PMC volunteer the last two years) this year, and the couple will do the shorter two day Wellesley-Bourne-Wellesley run.

Riding for a cure

few months in Florida, Cohasset, and Nantucket on various types of road and weather conditions. Training under adverse conditions was planned, as Bob ran into some problems last year when it was raining heavily at the beginning of the race.

Their daughter, Kristen, 17, will also be volunteering at Bourne. This is her second year on the volunteer team, "and they do a fantastic job," noted Bob.

"Our personal motivation is to remember close friends we have lost to this terrible disease and to support other special people in our lives who are currently battling the disease," said Bob. "We need to remind ourselves how precious life is and do all we can to help find a cure.

"This PMC ride is one way of giving back and providing support to all the folks we see along the route who are cancer survivors. It is an unbelievable feeling to experience the crowds and all the enthusiastic support all along the route for all the riders. It certainly gives you a lift to continue on."

Added Mary Allen: "We're doing something that is within our power to try and help combat diseases that affect so many people...people who we love who have heard those horrible and frightening words, 'you have cancer'."

Ron Sacks is the team captain for TEAM NVRGUP (Never Give Up). He is riding Sturbridge-Bourne-Wellesley (2-day) along with two other members of the team. Seven members of the team, including Ron's wife Michele, are doing the two-day Wellesley-Bourne-Wellesley.

This is the third year Ron and Michele have done the Challenge and the second year for the others on TEAM NVRGUP.

Three years ago, the Sacks' brother-in-law and friend, Joseph Cassidy, was diagnosed with Brain Cancer, Glioblastoma-Multiform (GBM). Sadly, Joe lost his fight with GBM. While fighting the cancer, Joe received his treatments at Dana Faber.

As Joe was going through his treatments, Ron and Michele spent a lot of time with Joe at Dana Farber and learned a lot about Cancer, Dana Farber and the Jimmy Fund.

"We ultimately felt compelled to do something that would help while at the same time honor Joe for his courageous fight against GBM," said Ron. "Several years earlier and prior to his diagnosis, Joe had become recognized for his most famous saying "NVRGUP" which he offered to others afflicted with cancer that he himself provided care compassion to.

"So Michele and I to put our legs to work and signed up for the PMC, raised over $10,000 and printed up two riding jerseys that said "TEAM NVRGUP". "

As they enter the third year, TEAM NVRGUP is now 10 riders strong, made up of family and friends.

"We now ride the PMC in Joe's memory, as well the memory of other family members and friends that have also had to battle cancer," continued Ron. "Last year, we had nine riders and raised $37,000."

Michele and Ron readied for the Challenge with regularly rides around the South Shore.

"The local community has definitely seen or heard us riding in a large group early weekday and weekend mornings as we ride down Jerusalem Rd and through the harbor," reported Ron. "The other members of the team have been training in their respective home towns.

"We plan to NVRGUP."

Nearly 4,000 cyclists from 40 states and six countries will ride in the PMC to raise $17 million, bringing the total contributed to Dana-Farber Cancer Institute through its Jimmy Fund to more than $120 million. The PMC's annual contribution funds life-saving cancer research and care for cancer patients around the globe. More than 160 PMC participants are cancer survivors or current patients, while others ride in honor of a friend or family member fighting the disease.

"Unfortunately, everyone has a connection to cancer in some way," says Billy Starr, PMC founder and executive director. "The PMC gives people a way to channel thankfulness for effective treatment or grief over lost loved ones into positive energy that helps others."

Since its inception in 1980, the PMC has become the most efficient athletic fundraising event in the country, donating 93 cents of every dollar to the Jimmy Fund. Cyclists are required to raise between $1,750 and $2,750 to ride, depending on the chosen route. The average cyclist raises $4,300.

The PMC, presented by the Boston Red Sox, offers six different routes, traveling through 46 Massachusetts towns over one or two days, covering between 89 and 192 miles. Two-day rides include the original 192-mile Sturbridge-to-Provincetown route; 186-mile Sturbridge-Bourne-Wellesley route; 169-mile Wellesley-Bourne-Provincetown route. One-day riders choose between the 108-mile Sturbridge-Bourne route and the 89-mile Wellesley-Bourne route.

To become a volunteer, a virtual rider, or make a financial contribution to a rider from your town, visit www.pmc.org or call (800) WE-CYCLE. Checks can be made payable to PMC, 77 Fourth Ave., Needham, MA 02494.

I wish to thank all of the riders of the Pan Mass Challenge who've taken the time to honor my request and tell the stories of their motivation for making this ride. Inspiring stuff, to be sure. In fact, the response has been so overwhelming, I simply did not have room to include information from all of these reports I've received (51 and counting, from just seven towns, at the time of this writing).

I promise to get to them all next week, though.

O'Brien (all from Scituate High), Ted Straughn and Tim Pilczak (from Cohasset High), Kevin Signorelli and Greg Malley (from Thayer Academy) and Ben Murphy (Xaverian) will be entering their senior years of high school this fall.

Scituate High's Mark Rennie and Nick Infucino and Thayer's Shane Caffrey are all juniors-to-be.

Carroll and Barba were the starters in the middle of the infield, and Signorelli held down the fort at third. Radding saw a lot of time at both first base and the outfield. O'Brien and Murphy are both top flight defensive catchers. O'Leary, Pilczak and Straughn were regulars in the outfield.

Signorelli was the winning pitcher in the team's thrilling regular season finale, a 5-2 victory on the road that knocked West Roxbury out of the playoff chase. O'Leary was the team's closer. Straughn and Malley were effective on the mound as well, and Infucino, Radding and Caffrey gained some valuable experience toeing the rubber.

"And that's not a bad core of players at all," insisted Duggan. "If we'd been able to keep that group together and healthy this season, things probably would have been a lot different, especially with the pitching situation."

Indeed.

Rennie, coming off a Mariner All-Scholastic season pitching for Scituate High, and Eric Dmohowski, a star with the team the previous two seasons, were expected to be the aces of the starting pitching rotation. Due to injuries, neither threw a single pitch this summer.

Malley appeared a promising candidate to help fill the void created by these absences, pitching very well in a start and a few relief appearances, but then he too went down before the season's midpoint.

Straughn, Cohasset High's ace this spring, pitched well in a few outings with the Post 118 team, but then missed the last few weeks in order to participate in a college baseball showcase down south.

Tim Pilczak wasn't a pitcher, but he was a key run producer in the middle of the order and an invaluable jack-of-all trades in the field, that is until a commitment to his Bay State Games hockey team took him away for the second half of the season.

Post 118 began the summer with 18 players on the roster, and ended it with 12.

"I don't think there are too many Legion teams out there that could have survived the loss of that many players they were counting on," appraised Duggan. "But we get all of those guys back next year except Dmohowski, and that alone will be a big lift."

That prospect alone, however, is not enough to satisfy Duggan's desire to improve this program.

"We do need to widen our pool of talent," said Duggan. "We've got a lot of good baseball players in these two towns playing at private school, but then going elsewhere to play summer ball. I'd like to be able to get a few more of those players into our system and start a pipeline."

Duggan claims he intends to become more proactive in his recruiting efforts for this team. Among the measures he promises to take is sending a letter to the Athletic Directors and baseball coaches at B.C. High, Thayer Academy, B.C. High, Xaverian, Archbishop Williams, and perhaps a few others, requesting their assistance in the recruiting process.

"If we're going to become a more competitive team, we need to create more competition within the team," asserted Duggan. "Our numbers for tryouts really weren't that good this year.

"A lot of our players this year weren't even worried about playing time. I'm not saying that caused them to stop taking things seriously, but maybe they weren't playing with quite the same focus they might have if their job had been on the line."

In no way, though, did Coach Duggan wish to downplay the graduations from the team of Jeff Ciulla, Joe Duggan and Brandon Stella.

Ciulla, a two-year varsity starter for SHS before his graduation in 2003, was a steadying force in center field. He started slowly at the plate, not surprising after a year away from the game, but emerged steadily over the second half of the summer as a big offensive spark plug out of the leadoff spot in the order. After this triumphant return to the game, which included his first ever over-the-fence home run at any level, Jeff now sounds resolved to play ball in his sophomore year at Endicott College.

Duggan, another 2003 SHS grad and also a Mariner All-Scholastic baseball selection that year, pitched more innings this summer than anyone on the Post 118 roster - this despite the fact he had not thrown a baseball in organized play this year. Not surprisingly, the Mass Maritime sophomore-to-be had little left down the stretch, and that proved a big factor in the team's late struggles.

The highlight of the summer for Stella, a 2004 SHS grad, was a five plus inning mound outing where he limited offensively potent post-season bound Morrisette to just five earned runs. The lefty who has limited use of his right arm (due to a pre-birth stroke) served as an inspiration to all associated with this team with that performance and with his hard work and positive attitude throughout summer. He hopes to pitch at the next level for Curry College.

"Those three guys all gave us a lift this year, and added to the fun," said Coach Duggan. "And it was a fun year. The guys on this team were great to be around, and they really did enjoy playing the game and being around one another."

The Shoe Market in Cohasset Plaza is going to relocate to Derby Street Shoppes in Hingham.

Shoe Market move to help build the sole of business

But relocation is a tough sell

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Greg Lagrotteria had hoped the news about moving his store from Route 3A's Cohasset Plaza to Derby Street Shoppes in Hingham would be a shoo-in with local customers.

But as it turns out, his fiercely loyal clientele is feeling a little let down that after seven years in Cohasset the Shoe Market will be relocating to the town next door.

"It's really surprised me how many people are disappointed we're moving," the Scituate resident said about the family business. "But they just need to give us a chance and see what this family is up to."

Lagrotteria said the move is going to allow the business to grow, including being able to offer more shoes in more sizes and increase the customer base with the new location which is off Route 3 near the Derby Street exit.

"This is an opportunity for us to be a complete men's and women's shoe store, offering the highest grade in footwear through aggressively priced products," he says.

Lagrotteria said in addition to offering a greater breadth of product, it's also very important to be able to fit customers properly.

"That will be accomplished with inventory and a commitment to extreme sizes and widths," he says. In addition to the store itself, the Shoe Market has 5,000 square feet of warehouse space in Hingham for the inventory to help service the size and width business. "We will be an all-service shoe store," Lagrotteria says.

The Shoe Market will not be selling children's shoes at its new location. That's being left up to the Shoe Market for Kids, which is independently owned by Lagrotteria's sister, Mary Sease, and will remain in Tedeschi Plaza off 3A in Cohasset.

Lagrotteria says his current location draws from the towns of Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Norwell, Scituate and Marshfield, which "have been the backbone of our business."

He thinks those customers will make the trek to the new 68-store, outdoor shopping center in Hingham, called a "lifestyle center" with brick sidewalks, lanterns, benches and places to eat and shop. The entrance to the new plaza off Derby Street will be fully signalized with traffic lights.

"We're halfway between Boston and Cape Cod and that's got to be a very positive thing," Lagrotteria says. The new store will be next to the Gap and a few doors down from Whole Foods.

He explained the Cohasset store is scheduled to close Dec. 23 and the Hingham store will open in mid-September. From now through its closing date, the Cohasset store will be a clearance center, Lagrotteria says.

"We are grateful for our loyal customers who mean a tremendous amount to us," he says. "We ask them to give us a chance while we take the next step."

Derby Street Shoppes is at the former Hingham Plaza shopping center. The new 400,000-square-foot pedestrian-friendly shopping center will include many high-end shops and restaurants.

Sam Pease joins New Directions

New Directions, Inc., the leader in career and life transition services for senior executives, announced that Samuel C. Pease of Cohasset, has joined the Boston firm as vice president. Pease brings to his new position 16 years in executive search, most recently as senior partner with Heidrick & Struggles in Boston.

As part of the senior consulting team at New Directions, Pease will both serve as liaison with companies that sponsor the firm's executive clients and as a primary adviser to clients in transition.

"Sam Pease brings to New Directions invaluable insight gained from many years working at the highest levels with the region's top businesses and executive leaders," said New Directions President Jeffrey D. Redmond. "Sam will be a tremendous asset for us, because he truly understands and cares about the needs of both the companies that seek our help for their departing executives and the leaders who come to us seeking new opportunities in their careers and lives."

Pease holds an MBA in finance from Boston University and a BA from Yale University. He resides in Cohasset.

Meeting the challenge posed by August

GREEN THUMBS UP

SUZANNE MAHLER

As the month of August progresses, many misplaced wildflowers begin to show their true colors. Even experienced gardeners are inclined to let unidentified plants linger in their borders, unsure if they are weeds, desirable seedlings, or perennials purchased in previous seasons whose labels have mysteriously wandered away. Some of these are remarkably easy to extricate such as the omnipresent jewelweed with its fleshy leaves and small trumpet-shaped orange flowers. Attractive to hummingbirds, these members of the Impatiens family are prevalent in moist, shady areas and will usually come up with just a gently tug on the tip of the plant. Others are much less accommodating and by the time we realize that they are weeds, they are firmly entrenched in our gardens. Mugwort, for instance, has foliage reminiscent of chrysanthemums early in the season but this vigorous member of the Artemisia family is a thug that spreads rampantly and often overtakes entire gardens crowding out many desirable plants. Intruders like dandelions, dock, and pokeweed require a digging fork to assist in their removal to ensure the entire taproot is lifted or they may reappear stronger than ever.

Weeds and crabgrass once again overrun many of my gardens that appeared weed-free a week ago. Although I prefer the old-fashioned method of pulling weeds one-by-one, occasionally the infestation becomes so overwhelming that it may be necessary to break the cycle and resort to chemicals. Once a thorough weeding has been performed, the application of a weed-preventative chemical like Preen will minimize seed germination. Of course, this application often prevents the germination of desirable offspring the following season. Annual plants like cleome, portulaca, snapdragons, calendulas, bachelor buttons, cosmos, annual poppies, and perilla and biennial plants, including forget-me-nots and foxgloves, are perpetual residents of my garden thanks to their prolific seed dispersal every season. I use these weed-preventative chemicals sparingly, generally preferring to pull the undesirable interlopers to ensure the reappearance of these plants from year to year.

The irritating weeds that spread by runners pose a greater concern for dedicated gardeners. Unless every tiny thread is eradicated, these plants are often relentless, growing stronger every season. Mugwort, creeping bellflower, and wild grass have overrun several of my gardens. Allowed to persist, these noxious weeds have infiltrated clumps of daylilies and other perennials to the point that even a carefully administered dose of Roundup would be futile. As the month progresses, I plan to pull the superficial growth and eventually lift each perennial and even bare-root the daylilies to remove every visible weed fiber and apply Roundup to newly emerging growth on remnants left behind. Although a tedious, time-consuming undertaking, this desperate action seems the only effective means of dealing with these thugs. In the meantime, removing seedheads is critical to prevent further invasions to other gardens.

As I wander through the garden on weed patrol, I pause to clip spent flowers. The routine practice of deadheading is essential for creating a tidy, ever-blooming garden. One primary reason to deadhead is purely aesthetic. Shriveled blooms and dead flower stalks are usually unsightly, spoiling the appearance of plants that are still in bloom. A few moments spent snipping withered flowers vastly improves the appearance of every plant.

Perhaps an even more important reason to deadhead is to prevent the formation of seedpods. The removal of faded flowers is essential to prolong the bloom of most plants, especially the ever-blooming annuals. If annuals are allowed to produce numerous seedpods, they tend to bloom less or may even cease to bloom entirely, as their mission to recreate themselves in a single growing season has been accomplished. Continuous deadheading of petunias, daisies, marigolds, zinnias, cosmos, verbena, salvia, snapdragons and dahlias encourages these plants to keep bearing flowers in a never-ending effort to produce seed.

For perennials, the removal of spent flowers or seed pods enables the plant to put its energy into making new growth and often prolongs bloom or may promote a second wave of blossoms later in the season. If the spent spikes of salvia, delphinium and veronica are snipped regularly, these perennials will usually produce new side shoots that produce flowers sporadically for weeks. These secondary bloom stalks are often smaller but offer color when many other perennials have faded. Coneflowers (Echinacea), heliopsis, tall phlox and coreopsis will also continue to bloom if deadheaded faithfully. Remove the stems of reblooming daylilies like Happy Returns and Stella de Oro, often covered with seedpods, and provide supplemental moisture to encourage subsequent bloom scapes until frost.

A tarp full of weeds and deadheads at the end of the day provides every gardener with a tremendous sense of accomplishment and well being and inspires us to repeat the process all summer long. Be sure to take a step back and admire your efforts.

Bone-in chicken thighs are great for outdoor cooking

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

Chicken thighs (bone-in) are perfectly suited for the grill. They are a good size, of relatively even thickness, and are hard to overcook since the dark meat remains moist. Yet, there are many variables to test. What about brining, a barbecue rub, or marinating? What about a glaze? Skin on or off? We fired up the grill to get some answers.

Dark meat chicken has much more fat than white, which makes it juicier and more flavorful. Leaving the meat on the bone also adds flavor. We wondered if all that might prove to make brining unnecessary. We compared thighs that had brined for 90 minutes to those that had been seasoned with salt and pepper. The brined thighs did have a moist "seasoned" quality, but the unbrined thighs had more of an unadulterated chicken taste, which was great with the smoky grilled flavors. So, dump the brine. Whether or not to leave on the skin turned out to be a matter of personal taste. It's your call.

In terms of a marinade, we started with a basic olive oil marinade and compared thighs that had been left to sit for 4 hours, 1 1/2 hours, and 30 minutes to those that were simply bathed in marinade after they had been grilled. The latter method was the winner since it delivered bigger flavors and it allows one to add fresh herbs which otherwise would char on the grill. We tested various ingredients and finally settled on / cup olive oil, 3 tablespoons lemon juice, garlic, salt and chopped fresh herbs.

Another alternative is to use a dry barbecue rub before grilling the thighs. Borrowing test results from the July/August issue of Cook's Illustrated (23 spices and herbs were tested for how they held up to high heat), we carefully chose a short list of items to use in the rub. (High heat renders many common rub ingredients such as paprika either tasteless or bitter.) The final list included only chili powder, cumin, sugar, salt and pepper.

The last test was whether a glaze might work well. The method was simple: We reduced a teriyaki-style glaze in a skillet and then brushed it onto the grilled thighs after cooking. This turned out to be a simple, delicious alternative to the spice rubs and the marinade and the recipe included 4 tablespoons soy sauce, 2 tablespoons each mirin and sake, and 1/2 teaspoon sugar. Once reduced, we also added one teaspoon toasted sesame oil. In this variation of the thighs they had more flavor if lightly seasoned before grilling.

In terms of cooking, the thighs are best if cooked over a two-level fire. This keeps them from becoming charred, especially on the skin side. The initial color is established on the hot side and then they are moved to the cooler side to finish the cooing. Thighs can vary in size and cooking times, but the average- size thigh takes about 15 minutes to grill. We oiled the grates with soaked paper towel. Unless using the spice rub, we favored thighs that were lightly seasoned with salt and pepper before going onto the grill — it is difficult to fully season a dish if you add all of the flavor at the end of the cooking process.

Grilled chicken thighs

We prefer bone-in thighs since they have more flavor and are juicier. You can grill them with the skin on or off.

2 tablespoons chili powder
1 tablespoon ground cumin
2 teaspoons brown sugar
2 teaspoons salt
1-1/2 teaspoons freshly ground black pepper
10 bone-in chicken thighs, skin optional

1. Combine the first five ingredients in a small bowl and set aside. Ignite grill and arrange coals (we use a full 6-quart chimney starter) in a single layer on one side of the grill and a mound on the other side to create a two-level fire.

2. Wash and pat dry the chicken thighs. Sprinkle the rub onto the thighs and pat down to help adhere. Rub cooking grates with oil-soaked paper towel wad using tongs. Place the thighs on the hot side of the grill and cook without moving and cook until well-browned, about two minutes. Turn and cook until browned on second side, about 1 1/2 minutes longer. Transfer the thighs to the cooler side of the grill and cook until firm, plump and the internal temperature reaches 165 degrees, about 12 minutes longer. Alternatively you may prick them with a paring knife. When done, the juices will run clear and the meat will no longer be pink. Serve immediately.

Serves 4 to 6.

Olive oil/lemon juice marinade

Omit the first five ingredients in the above recipe (the chili powder through the pepper). In a small bowl combine 1/4 cup best quality olive oil, 3 tablespoons lemon juice, 1 small- to-medium clove garlic, pressed or minced, 1/2 teaspoon salt, freshly ground black pepper to taste, and 2 tablespoons fresh chopped parsley, thyme, sage, basil, marjoram or herb of your choice. Lightly season the thighs with salt and pepper and grill according to directions in Step 2. Once the thighs have finished cooking place them in a baking dish and drizzle with the marinade. Allow them to sit for two minutes turning every thirty seconds. Serve immediately.

With teriyaki glaze

Omit the first five ingredients in the above recipe (the chili powder through the pepper). In a medium skillet, combine 4 tablespoons soy sauce (low sodium preferred), 2 tablespoons mirin, 2 tablespoons sake, and 1/2-teaspoon sugar. Bring to a simmer and let cook until reduced to a syrupy consistency. Off heat, stir in 1 teaspoon toasted sesame oil. Set aside. Lightly season the thighs with salt and pepper and grill according to directions in Step 2. Once the thighs have finished cooking remove to a platter and spoon or brush on the glaze. Serve immediately.

Caution: community theatre can be a habit forming event

'Birdie' auditions are Aug. 16 & 17

By Roy Harris
SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL

Are you a Broadway-musical lover who's curious about what happens backstage to make a show magical? Or do you still remember some long-ago thespian experience in school, and wonder if you could still belt out a song, say a line, or do a step before an audience?

In either case, you have a chance to fulfill your fantasies on Aug. 16 & 17. Those are the Monday and Tuesday audition days — at 7 p.m. at Hingham Town Hall's Sanborn Auditorium — for the Hingham Civic Music Theatre's October production of the 1960s Broadway delight "Bye Bye Birdie." It is a show loaded with hit songs, including "Put On a Happy Face," "A Lot of Living to Do" and "Kids." The callback date is Thursday, Aug. 19.

The actual production of "Birdie" will be staged at Hingham High School on Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 16 & 17 (a matinee), and again on Friday and Saturday evenings, Oct. 22 & 23. Auditioners are asked to bring sheet music and be prepared to sing one verse of one song of their choice — not necessarily from "Birdie"— that shows their vocal range. An accompanist is provided. A "minimal dance audition" is also held. All principal roles are open, and the director also is seeking about 15-20 people for the chorus ensemble, including some children (age 12 and older.)

One cautionary note from this writer: auditioning and performing in such community theatre can become habit-forming.

After 35 years since last appearing on stage as a member of the chorus in a college musical, I timidly took a chance two years ago when HCMT began casting for its production of "Damn Yankees." I didn't get the role I wanted — the manager who sings "You Gotta Have Heart"— but eventually was thrilled with the role the director offered me. (I got to sing a solo, and sell my soul each performance to Mr. Applegate, the musical's devil character.) Next production, I was back for "The Music Man," and a new affiliation with yet another wonderful group of HCMT players.

With its charming Charles Strouse-Lee Adams music, "Birdie" tells the story of young, Elvis-style rock 'n roll phenomenon Conrad Birdie, and the havoc he wreaks among star-struck families in Sweet Apple, Ohio. The director of HCMT's production is community theatre veteran Mark Bono, with music direction by Bob Kniffen and choreography by Stephen Lee. For more information on the auditions, contact stage manager Pat Sherman at 781-837-1499 (stagemomma2003@yahoo.com), or Bono at 617-696-6569 (mgbono@msn.com).

Step back in time at tool exhibit

Tells story of Hingham's past at Old Ordinary

By Constance Gorfinkle
SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL

The tools on exhibit at the Old Ordinary house museum in Hingham tell the story of our country as much as any book might. As mundane as a hatchet and as complex as a sextant, they demonstrate the ingenuity and determination of our forbears as they carved out a home for themselves on land that often was less than hospitable.

Most of the items in the show are culled from the collection of the Hingham Historical Society, which owns and runs the Old Ordinary, a one-time way station for travelers. Ranging from the mid-1700s to the early 1900s, they line the walls of a large room off the house's kitchen and fill cases in a nearby Exhibit Room, providing an insight into the wide variety of trades practiced in Hingham during that period. Using the terms of the day, there were housewrights, shipwrights, curriers (leather workers), joiners (did interior finish work) and, most famously, coopers, whose Hingham buckets are still prized possessions.

Of course, there were also cabinetmakers, shoemakers and blacksmiths, all of whom contributed their skills to making life better before mass manufacturing took over most of those chores.

The Historical Society's tool collection always has been in plain sight. But it took the efforts of the Old Ordinary's co-chairmen, Lisa Hemphill and Penni Hughes, to display them in a way that would capture the imagination and bring to life the world in which they played vital roles. The women did that by improving the lighting in the Tool Room, organizing the display in a coherent fashion and providing clear explanations of each tool's function through attractive signage created by Virginia McLaughlin.

Chris Nassise, a furniture-maker and student at the North Bennett School, which teaches traditional trades demonstrates the process of shaping wood at the Old Ordinary Tools of the Trade exhibit.

That this exhibit could be mounted at all, Lisa Hemphill say, is due to Rear Admiral Harold Travis Smith. A director of the Historical Society from 1950 to 1956, Smith, says Hemphill, undertook the daunting project of repairing, cleaning and identifying the use and origin of the Society's hundreds of tools and fragments through exhaustive research at libraries and museums.

While the Tool Room presents a broad survey of tools used for carpentry, shipbuilding, house building and precision metal-casting, the Exhibit Room concentrates mainly on the art of coopering. That was not a hard decision to make, since about 80 percent of the Society's collection is composed of carpentry tools, and most of those were used to make buckets. Thus, a visitor is taken through every stage of fashioning a bucket, from quartering a log for the staves to the final smoothing of the bucket with a "spokeshave" or small drawknife.

If coopering was Hingham's best-known trade, it by no means was the only one that turned out handsome, necessary and well-made products. There were the award-winning charles Howard plow, an example of which is on display; the Stephensons' scales and balances; John Jacobs' hammers that eventually were sold world-wide, and clocks made by Joshua Wilder and Reuben Tower.

Though Hemphill and Hughes have learned a lot in organizing "Tools of the Trade from Hingham's Past," Hemphill acknowledges that neither of them could have accomplished as much as they have without help from Chris Nassise, a furniture-maker and student at the North Bennett School, which teaches traditional trades.

With Nassise's guidance, the women developed an understanding and appreciation for these artifacts, which had once seemed arcane and exotic.

It's a common perception that Hemphill hopes the exhibit will help to dispel. "Tools of the Trade from Hingham's Past" will be up through Sept. 11. Hours are Tuesday through Saturday, 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. Admission is $3 for adults; $1 for children. For more information, call 781-749-0013.

A bunch of talent

Brady entertains at SSMC Aug. 6

Wayne Brady is definitely a glass-half-full kind of guy.

The entertainer— who plays the South Shore Music Circus on Friday — won his second consecutive daytime Emmy award as best talk show host this spring, only weeks after his eponymous series ended production following two critically acclaimed, but ratings-challenged years on the air. Instead of becoming depressed at the career downturn, Brady saw the cancellation as an opportunity.

"I had a great time doing the daytime show," explained Brady last week by telephone from his Hollywood office. "It went into millions of people's homes. I also learned a lot about producing. To a certain extent, however, doing a daily television show held me back. I had started getting feature film and other offers that I couldn't accept, so it was actually okay with me when the show ended."

Brady wasted no time in accepting some of those other offers. He's preparing to record his first R&B album. Later this month, he will also begin rehearsals for his Broadway debut this fall as slick lawyer Billy Flynn in the musical "Chicago." For the Orlando native, who was still in high school when he began his career in central Florida productions including "A Chorus Line," "Jesus Christ Superstar," and "A Raisin in the Sun," Broadway has long been on the agenda.

"Back in 1997, I was supposed to originate the role of the adult Simba in "The Lion King" when it opened in New York. Then I decided to stay on the West Coast and pursue my options there. My agents weren't happy, but I was."

Before long, his agents were, too. After completing a two-year run on the syndicated sketch-comedy show, "Kwik Witz," Brady joined ABC-TV's Drew Carey-hosted "Who's Line Is It Anyway?" His spirited comic and musical improvisations earned him a 2003 Emmy Award for Best Individual Performance in a Variety, Music, or Comedy Series, making him the first performer ever to win daytime and prime-time Emmy awards in the same year.

Brady, 32, will put his well-honed improvisational skills to use this week in Cohasset. "In my show, I do plenty of live improv with a partner, Jonathan, who bounces ideas off me. I also do a 30-minute concert of song styles and songs suggested by the audience," says Brady. "Because of "Who's Line," people now come to see me with a certain expectation. That's fine, though, because with improv you are supposed to be fearful. You have to be scared to improv well."

Improv not only helped make Brady a television star, but also plays a role in the rest of his career.

"It is really an acting exercise. I've always used it to help me get over the fear I have had when I've done book shows. Improv is really a skill set. Some people think improv is supposed to be funny, but you can't teach someone to be funny. Once you learn the skill set, then you lay down the natural funny."

Tour is tonic for Loggins

Singer/songwriter and son make Cohasset stop Aug. 11

Kenny Loggins will probably perform most of his biggest hits, including "This Is It," "Whenever I Call You Friend," "Meet Me Half Way," and "House at Pooh Corner," next Wednesday at the South Shore Music Circus. After a recent painful separation from wife, Julia, however, Loggins will be steering clear of songs that remind him of his second failed marriage.

"There's some music I just can't do yet, because I've only been out of the marriage for five months and it has been excruciating," explained Loggins, 56, last week by telephone from Las Vegas.

Kenny and Julia Loggins were married 12 years ago. In 1997, the pair co-wrote a marital self-help book, The Unimaginable Life: Lessons Learned on the Path of Love, which was also the title of a Loggins album released that year and dealing with the same themes of unconventional love. A new age devotee, Julia introduced Kenny to a host of spiritual advisers and therapists. At his suggestion, the couple was married in the nude, his way of showing they had nothing to hide. She got him to shave off the beard he had worn for 25 years. After having two children together, in addition to Kenny's three adult children from his first marriage, the free-spirited pair went their separate ways earlier this year. Loggins admits that having shared the secrets of the marriage in such a widely publicized manner has made its demise even more difficult.

"This whole situation has been painful, even more so because we came forward in our book and shared our spirituality with the world," says the singer and songwriter. "We promised one another to support our spiritual and emotional growth, though, and that's still involved in our lives even during this separation."

Loggins — whose best-selling songs include "Danger Zone" from Top Gun, "I'm Allright" from Caddyshack and "Footloose" from the feature film of the same name — first gained fame in the early 1970s as one half of Loggins and Messina. Loggins and Jim Messina, charting with "Your Mama Don't Dance," "Angry Eyes," and "Danny's Song" before splitting in 1976. Loggins has been a solo act ever since, but this summer will be joined at some of his tour dates by his son, Crosby Loggins. During this trying time, the younger Loggins will be doing more than just opening for his father.

"Crosby is doing some dates with me, including Cohasset, as a favor. Crosby's record label would prefer he focus on his own career. They're not too happy when he comes out on the road with me. It is entirely an act of love for him to be doing this so he can be close to be me right now. I'm loving having Crosby on the road with me. He is the most wise and empathetic person I know."

And talented, too, according to the elder Loggins who offers his full support even though he is well aware of the challenges his son may face in show business.

"I encourage him, because it is so obvious that it is his passion. To go into the same field as your very successful father, however, is very difficult. He will do well, though, because he is a brilliant songwriter. He's very much in the acoustic rock, John Mayer style that's happening now. Once he finishes his record, I'd love to be his opening act."

(Kenny Loggins will perform at the South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset Wednesday, Aug. 11. For tickets and information, call 617/931-2787 or visit www.themusiccircus.org.

LISTEN To Life
by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

TWO FOR ONE

People who have difficulty hearing in both ears almost always benefit from a binaural fitting (wearing a hearing instrument in each ear). Doing so helps localize sounds and improves ability to understand speech in noisy environments. The brain requires input from both ears to discern from which direction sounds are coming. When you hear a car horn, within a split second, your brain compares the information received from both ears and tells you from which direction the automobile is coming and how far away it is. This is called sound localization. A binaural hearing instrument fitting also reduces the risk of auditory deprivation, in which the brain loses some of its ability to process information from the unaided ear.

One of the most important things we do at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER is help all our patients comprehend their hearing impairments and help them be aware of the products available that can improve their lives. It's important to us that you enjoy the world in which you live, and we look forward to using our extensive training and skills to serve the individual needs of the hearing impaired. Please call us at 781-337-1144 for a free hearing test at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth. We also have an office in Abington.

P.S. When you hear equally well in both ears, listening to sounds becomes more comfortable.

Police survey coming soon

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Have you ever been the victim of a crime in Cohasset?

Is domestic violence a serious problem?

Have you ever been arrested or reported a crime?

Do you agree or disagree that telephone calls to the Cohasset Police Department are handled professionally and courteously?

Are there enough women on the CPD?

These questions and many more – that are expected to take 20-25 minutes to respond to – are part of a police department survey that will soon be available to residents.

Selectmen gave Police Chief James Hussey's draft survey a warm reception at their meeting Tuesday.

They weren't comfortable with questions about race and income, but understood the survey is anonymous and respondents can choose to skip questions they may not wish to answer or have no opinion about.

Shop gives village a new Twist

Energetic owner has creative flair

Just as a twist of lemon has the ability to add a little zing, Sue McCarthy's South Main Street shop "Twist" has done the same for Cohasset Village.

With shades of lime and mango splashing the walls, an aqua polka-dotted lamp hanging over the resister, and an owner just as colorful as the items she sells — Twist is a vibrant new downtown shop which is anything but ordinary.

"It was something we'd thought about, and I was never really going to do it, and look at me now."

A designer at heart, and by profession, McCarthy has been blessed with a creative flair. Her vision has produced everything from clothing to greeting cards and stationery, to plates and serving trays, which are marketed under the pseudonym Sue Dreamer.

McCarthy, a Scituate resident, has a wide selection of items for everyone in the family. With cheerful patterns in many shades and colors, she has crafted her own distinct line of products, including clothing, stationery, specialty gifts,

Defibrillators to be installed in all schools

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Supt. Denise Walsh and the Cohasset Fire Department have a lot in common. Both want Automated External Defibrillators, which can give a life-saving shock to someone in cardiac arrest, available in every school and both have witnessed firsthand how important it is to have one available during an emergency.

When a fifth-grade student at one of Walsh's previous school districts went into cardiac arrest, it changed her outlook on AEDs forever. Without an AED on site, the young child almost lost his life. Fortunately, the nurse was able to resuscitate him. "But we learned a very tough lesson that day." Walsh said as of that moment, she vowed to never again be put into a position where the necessary equipment to save a child's life was not available during an emergency.

"On the Cape, they're as common as can be. We're trying to play catch up."
— Fire Capt. Robert Silvia

With the help of fire Capt. Robert Silvia, the schools will be working toward installing AEDs in all three Cohasset public schools. The goal is to have one AED installed at the Osgood School, another at Deer Hill, and two at the middle-high school. Silvia proposed the idea to the school committee Monday, and it received unanimous support.

With the current budget situation for the schools, members of the school committee wondered how the devices would be paid for. Each AED unit, complete with a wall mount, costs roughly $2,500. The department would like to purchase AEDs which are very user-friendly, are color coded, and "speak" to the user, giving proper operating instructions. They run on batteries, which have a life span of roughly five years, or 300 shocks, and come with two adult pads and one pediatric pad, which can be used for children under 8 years old.

Silvia said already, funds for one AED for the schools have been donated by the Chatterton fund, started in memory of former longtime high school Athletic Director Clark Chatterton, who passed away in the summer of 2000. The committee said it will look into different grant programs and possible fund-raisers which would provide the funding for three additional AEDs.

Search for new town manager to start

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Selectmen have appointed an 11-member search committee to look for a new town manager.

The first advertisement for the position will be placed the end of August, but advertising on the Internet could start sooner.

Plans are to have résumés submitted to the selectmen's office by Sept. 28. The committee will narrow the field down to five finalists and provide their names to the board of selectmen that will choose the next town manager.

The town manager search committee consists of library trustee Shiela Evans; advisory committee chairman Donna McGee; school committee member Rick Flynn; Sam Pease of the capital budget committee; DPW employee Mary Snow; treasurer/collector Joe DiVito; citizens-at-large Melissa Brown and John Brown who both have business experience; and selectmen Fred Koed and Rob Spofford.

Selectmen said the salary would be commensurate with experience and declined to provide a salary range at their Tuesday meeting.

Mark Haddad, the former town manager who resigned in May, was paid $105,475 a year. He held the position for seven years. Finance Director Michael Buckley has been serving as acting town manager since Haddad stepped down and is not seeking the town manager post on a permanent basis.

Selectmen hope to have a new town manager in place by the November Special Town Meeting.

Nineteen citizens applied for the search committee, selectmen said.

The search committee that plans to hold its first meeting the week of Aug. 23 will look at involving a municipal search firm and won't limit it search to New England. As an example, Duxbury Town Manager Rocco Longo came from New Jersey, selectmen noted.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer, who suggested ads be placed in the Wall Street Journal and New York Times, stressed the committee should be open to applicants with a business background and not be limited to those with strictly municipal experience.

Dormitzer said it is critical that "we can the very best person we can."

The Magical Moon Foundation, started by local artist Donna Green, is looking to raise $150,000 to send care packages to children with cancer. To date, a total of $7,500 has been raised for the cause. KoKo Island is open

KoKo Island continues to be open for business. The establishment won't close until plans to redevelop the site move ahead. KoKo Island has been serving the town for about 25 years.

Landscaping looks good at high school

One of the last phases of the school construction projects is being completed and landscaping is providing the finishing touch at the high school. New plantings have gone in around the outside of the building, and mulch has been laid down. But one of the greatest improvements are the courtyards, which have been transformed into beautiful green spaces where there once were weeds.

To help keep the plants going strong, they need to be watered regularly, bur during construction, pipes which would have enabled sprinkler hookups were cut off. The high school currently has hoses running from the restrooms through the halls, and out the doors to the courtyards.

Early use of field

Although the school building committee recommend the back field at the high school be given three growing seasons before it is used, the school committee is requesting the field be used this fall. Athletic Director Ron Ford said this was the year the school was supposed to get the field back, and with the other restrictions for fields which have also been re-seeded, "We have no place to go," he said.

Football practice begins in two weeks, and Ford said if the field can be used for practice only, next spring the teams won't need it and it can "rest." However, for now, it is essential the players have a field to practice on.

While it is a risk, Supt. Denise Walsh said the town has agreed to support the schools in the early release of the field and re-seed if needed. The building committee will have the final say on whether to release the field or not.

School Committee has new meeting room

The School Committee will holds its next meeting from the newly equipped meeting room near the superintendent's office. Cameras and other equipment arrived at the school Aug. 9 which will allow the meetings to be televised. The committee's Sept. 9 meeting is slated to be held in the new meeting room instead of the library, provided the installation is complete.

Facelift, expansion on DiNero's menu

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Roughly one month ago, representatives from DiNero's restaurant came before the planning board with potential plans to renovate and expand their current operation. That idea has morphed into a concrete plan, as restaurant owner Frank Plotner has formally filed a site plan review application, allowing the public hearing process to begin.

Looking for ways to better accommodate guests, Plotner assembled a team of experts to help with a redesign of the site. Members of that team met informally with the planning board to gain feedback, and came back with not only plans in hand, but letters of endorsement for the proposed changes from more than 20 patrons.

Changes to the restaurant, which includes an expansion of the function room, will change its shape from the outside. The new silhouette will be more in keeping with the surrounding architecture. "We're going for an expanded farmhouse look," said Frank Amonte of Kelly Engineering, the firm that Plotner has hired to help with the expansion. In addition to the new shape, patrons will see new windows on the original building as well as a new outside canopy. The new color palette will be shades of navy blue, tan, and creme. A new exposed aggregate walkway will be installed outside for accessibility. Landscaping will be irrigated, and plantings will be low-growing to assure visibility is not impeded.

Because the restaurant will be adding roughly 1,700 square feet with the renovations, there will be a need for additional parking. Plans will reconfigure parking to aid in the flow of traffic, which has gone over very well with the planning board, as parking has been very problematic at the site in the past. DiNero's is located in West Corner at 235 Hull St., and virtually sits on the road. With the current parking configuration, patrons have needed to back up onto the street, which isn't the safest means of exiting the site. There also has been a completely open egress at the parking lot entrance, which has also caused parking lot confusion. The new plans have one exit and one entrance, and greenspace on the portion of the lot closest to the street, to help control the flow of traffic.

Currently, there are 27 spaces striped for parking, but they are more narrow than what the town requires, and many times patrons do not fill every space for fear of having someone else open their car door and bump into them. Currently, parking spaces are striped at 17 ft. 6 ins. by 7 ft. 6 ins., when the town requires 20 ft. by 9 ft. 6 ins. Amonte said new spaces will comply with the width and length criteria of the town. The new configuration will have 37 total spaces, of which two are set aside for the apartment located above the restaurant. The new configuration has two more spaces than the restaurant is required to have.

On the inside will be a new function room, which can potentially be broken up into two smaller function rooms by using dividers, freeing up space in the main dining room. Currently there are 70 seats at DiNero's, and that number would be increased to roughly 93 with the new expansion. With the additional space, tables will be able to spread out, which will have patrons sitting more comfortably. In addition, the function room will increase the variety of services the restaurant can provide, as it will enable DiNero's to host small functions and gatherings without having to close the entire restaurant to the public. The current ceiling height in the dining room is only 7 ft. 2 ins., and expansions would allow for a ceiling height of between 12 and 15 feet. There will also be two new restrooms constructed near the new addition, and the current restrooms will remain where they are.

One concern voiced by the planning board at the informal discussion was the possibility of additional light and noise from the site, and how that will impact abutters. Since that meeting, noise and lighting studies have been done. Amonte said the new refrigeration unit will be enclosed and there will be a significant decrease in noise on the site with the new equipment.

Amonte also said all lighting on the property will be cast downward to eliminate ambient light spillage. He said Plotner has already begun implementing a code of operation which will dictate the lights that should and should not be kept on after the restaurant closes. Some lighting is required on site at all times for safety.

Some abutters were concerned about the location of the dumpster on site. The plans show it will be moved to the far right corner of the parking lot, away from the restaurant. The dumpster is currently standing closer to the restaurant, and abutter John Fairchild, whose home essentially looks over the restaurant and dumpster at its current location, said because it is routinely emptied and sanitized, he never notices any odors.

Representatives from DiNero's will be back before the planning board to continue the public hearing on Aug. 25.

What are the odds for Keno at DiNero's?

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

DiNero's restaurant at West Corner hasn't given up hope for a Keno license.

The restaurant has an expansion plan before the planning board, which could eliminate its parking problems.

Selectman Chairman Michael Sullivan said he isn't sure what the outcome would be should the restaurant apply for a license again. "They applied once, and it was denied based largely on neighbor opposition," said Sullivan. He said the concerns of abutters will need to be factored in again if an application is filed.

Selectmen voted in June 2002 to object to DiNero's request for a Keno license. The request then went before the Massachusetts State Lottery Commission, which has the authority to issue the license. The lottery commission upheld the selectmen's ruling, and DiNero's did not receive a license. At that time, Gregory Sullivan, attorney for DiNero's, said the game would generate about $2,000 a week for the restaurant.

Some abutters worry a second Keno license application will be filed as a result of changes to the building and have asked the planning board to take control of the matter.

Maria Plante, 798 Jerusalem Road, said she would like to see the planning board instate a no-gambling condition for site plan approval. Without Keno, she said she would have no problem with the restaurant's expansion. Other abutters expressed similar opinions.

However, members of the planning board weren't sure whether denying a site plan or conditioning a site plan based essentially on a license which is granted by another town board is within the board's purview. Member Peter Pratt suggested the board ask Town Counsel for an opinion.

Attorney Sullivan said the restaurant is entitled to a Keno license. He selectmen have looked into the matter in depth. He believes the consensus of the board was that if the parking lot was expanded, DiNero's could reapply. While Attorney Sullivan said there aren't any specific provisions made in the new plans for Keno, and that owner Frank Plotner is not requesting a Keno license at this point in time, he is optimistic about the future. "I think the issue will resolve itself," he said.

Balance of power protected by TMA

Selectmen need to use oversight

The Town Manager Act Review Committee also wants to give the advisory committee more of a say in the budget process.

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It's could be a very different board of selectmen.

That's the message from the Town Manager Act Review Committee which has found there is little to change in the act itself — but a lot the selectmen could do to ensure there is a balance of power at Town Hall.

The review committee is charged with coming up with recommendations for potential changes to the Town Manager Act voted at the 1997 annual Town Meeting and subsequently enacted by the state Legislature.

Over the past two months, as committee members delved into the wording of the Town Manager Act, itself, a common theme resonating throughout their meetings has been the fact the act now provides selectmen with the power to exercise control over actions and recommendations of the town manager.

Selectmen just need to use their power of oversight, the committee said.

The review committee — which will provide a draft report in two weeks — has backed off a suggestion the town manager be required to live in town. Members were afraid a restriction like that might limit the pool of applicants and could ultimately cost more because the cost of living in Cohasset puts the town out of the reach for many.

The committee also wants to give the advisory committee more of a say in the budget process. While the advisory committee under the town manager form of government has been actively involved and has pushed back on many budget requests — it has no real power under the Town Manager Act. Rather than tinker with the act itself, the committee proposal would change Cohasset General Bylaws to include requiring the advisory committee's budget recommendations be printed in the Town Warrant, which is mailed to all residents prior to Town Meeting. That way residents would have ample time to review recommendations of selectmen and the advisory committee and come to Town Meeting prepared to debate potential differences.

Selectmen formed the review committee following the resignation of town manager Mark Haddad in May. Haddad's resignation after seven years in the post provided the opportunity to examine the Town Manager Act to see if it needed any wholesale changes or minor tweaking.

Review committee chairman Rob Spofford, who is also a selectman, will draft the committee report that will be available for public comment.

The committee also wants to see a different grievance procedure for employees not protected by a union. Committee members think the power to hire and fire should remain with the town manager. But they want to see clear polices and procedures established, and think the town might benefit from the services of a human resources professional, even on a part-time basis.

Schools to get to the heart of lifesaving technology

AEDs, Silvia said there is a possibility the schools will have access to an additional defibrillator during sports seasons. A family in town has generously donated the funds necessary to buy an AED unit, and they have specified they would like to see it made available at the beach during the summer. Silvia said because the lifeguards are only on duty for three months out of the year, that AED could be used by the sports teams the other nine months of the year. The unit will be in a waterproof case, and it can be transported to practices in the back of the golf cart with the sports trainer.

Member Jamie Williams asked if the schools would need any new insurance to be able to have the AEDs in the school. Silvia said anyone who uses the machine to save a life is covered under the Good Samaritan Act. The fire department will be offering training sessions to ensure there are always individuals around who are trained and feel comfortable using the machine, that are able to use it at a moment's notice.

Silvia said currently, the fire department has 16 members who are accredited to teach both CPR and AED training. It is his goal to one day have every junior and senior in high school CPR and AED certified, with an AED hanging in the gym, making it a truly publicly accessible piece of equipment that anyone who is trained can use.

While a policy will have to be formally adopted by the schools for AED use, Silvia said other schools that use the machines have implemented response teams made up of individuals who have all completed AED training. During an emergency, communication would be key. Someone in the office would have to be notified of the emergency and would make the 911 call, while someone else takes the defibrillator off the wall mount. Only adults would have access to the AEDs, which would most likely be kept in the nurse's office. All members of the emergency response team would be notified of the emergency and would respond quickly to help the patient while the defibrillator is delivered.

Silvia added studies have shown if a person can be defibrillated within one to two minutes of going into sudden cardiac arrest, there is an 80 percent chance of survival. However, that survival rate decreases with every passing minute, and with a delay of 10 minutes, there is a less than 5 percent chance the person will be able to pull through.

Heart safe

Silvia said implementing AEDs in schools is nothing new. On Cape Cod, every community is considered "Heart Safe," which means they all have equipment available on hand in public places that even someone with minimal training can use to save the life of someone who has gone into cardiac arrest. The town of Yarmouth has 46 AEDs spread throughout different buildings around town. "On the Cape, they're as common as can be," Silvia said. "We're trying to play catch up."

In order to have the AEDs in the schools, the school committee is required to designate an emergency healthcare provider to monitor the program and ensure all designated responders are properly trained and that AEDs are properly maintained. South Shore Hospital has set up a protocol for working with schools, and the Cohasset Fire Department has been in touch with officials there. Under the direction of the hospital, the fire department will handle all training and maintenance of the machines for the town.

Silvia said currently the hospital will only oversee AED use in schools, but he is working toward one day working out a policy which will have the hospital overseeing AED use in public buildings. However, Silvia said for anyone who owns a private business and would like to install an AED, "All you need is a doctor willing to be the medical director."

Silvia hopes to one day have AEDs available all over town. Already, every fire department truck has an AED, and the next step will be to outfit every police car with an AED as well, to ensure all first responding vehicles will all have access to the devices. After the safety vehicles, Silvia said the public buildings, such as the schools and town hall will be outfitted. From there, he hopes other buildings where many people congregate, such as the hotels and supermarkets will also receive AEDs. "We're hoping to have them as common as fire extinguishers," said Silvia.

But there is a cost associated with every AED. While the department was able to purchase theirs using grant money, outfitting buildings all over town will require some fund-raising. Silvia said he is hoping the program will not cost anything for the town, and that all the funds can be raised privately.

"We want to get as many out and as many people trained as possible," said Silvia.

An AED gift fund has been started for donations, and Silvia said, donations in any amount will be gratefully accepted. He stressed that while the units cost roughly $2,500 each, every contribution will help the department reach its goal. Those interested in making a donation can make checks payable to the town of Cohasset. Checks can be sent to either the Cohasset Fire Department, c/o Captain Robert Silvia, 44 Elm St., or to Town Manager Michael Buckley at Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Avenue.

Intramural sports program offered at the middle school

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Middle school students will have an abundance of activities to keep them busy after school this fall. Under the direction of Athletic Director Ron Ford, a new intramural program will begin, which will allow any student to try something different, whether it be mountain biking, dance, flag football, hiking, or badminton.

As a result of budget cuts, the middle school interscholastic sports program was no longer able to continue. In its place, Ford has created a new program which he hopes will provide something for everyone.

While the interscholastic program had been geared more toward getting young athletes ready to compete in sports at the high school level, the new program would focus more on giving students of all athletic abilities and interest a chance to become involved. By offering two- to three-week sessions for a particular activity, students can keep their options open.

"It's going to be a work in progress," said Ford, adding he plans to have students fill out a survey to see what they like to do. While there are some ideas on the table for after-school activities, he would like to see students be able to participate in activities they are interested in. He hopes to use their feedback to design the program as it gets off the ground, and said pretty much anything can go, "As long as it's not bungee jumping."

Ford said the program has been designed around the themes of the middle school culture, which includes being able to explore and have new experiences. "When they get to the high school, it's such a big thing if they switch sports," he said. However, before they get to high school, Ford said they have the freedom to be able to look into all their options and keep an open mind.

School Committee member Rick Flynn said he is very optimistic about the future of the program. He said his son is going into the seventh grade this year, and he has therefore been able to get to know that class very well. "They will try anything," he said, whether it be skateboarding or any other sport or activity. He said this program will help "Let kids be kids," and learn something new while making friends.

Ford said some of the different activities which will most likely be offered are: field hockey, flag football, badminton, volleyball, ultimate Frisbee, biking, walking, basket ball, yoga, wrestling, team handball, gymnastics, hiking and dance. Others can be added based on interest and an available advisor to direct the activity.

The program will be self-funding, and therefore will require sufficient enrollment to enable plans to move forward.

There will be a director other than Ford to help run the program, and advisors for each activity. Ford said he is hoping teachers with an interest in an activity will jump in and help the program get off the ground. Any activity can be a great after-school addition, and the more variety the better.

The program will be self-funding, and therefore will require sufficient enrollment to enable the plans to move forward. Students who participate will be asked to pay a user fee of $75 per semester, and $125 for the year. No student will be denied participation in the intramural program because of a financial hardship.

There will be expenses for the program, including the hiring of a director for the year at $2,000. In addition, activity advisors will be paid $30 per hour, for approximately 300 hours, for a total of $9,000. Supplies will cost roughly $2,000 per year, and 15 officials for sports with a game-ending activity will be paid $50 per activity or roughly $75- per year. Medical supplies will cost $200, lining of fields will also cost $200, a contingency fund of $250 will need to be paid, as well as T-shirts for participants which will cost roughly $1,400. To cover expenses, roughly 127 students will need to sign up for the entire year, or 211 for half the year.

For more information, please contact Athletic Director Ron Ford at (781) 383-6103 or Principal Jack DeLorenzo at (781) 383-6100.

New director of student services hired

Cohasset has a new director of student services in Marshfield resident Linda Gill. A former special education teacher in the Cohasset school system from 1989 until 1996, Gill has already "hit the ground running," spending Wednesday morning working at the school, although still employed by her former school district, said Supt. Denise Walsh.

Gill earned her bachelor's degree in sociology from Colby College in Maine, then went on to earn her master's degree in special education from Peabody College at Vanderbilt in Tennessee. She earned her certificate of advanced graduate study from Bridgewater State College.

Gill is slated to come on board around Sept. 20. She replaces Karen Watts.

School energy audit update

New school business clerk Karen Park said she has met with a representative from Keyspan to discuss the high gas bill the schools recently received. The school currently owes $90,000 to Keyspan for gas, which was an unexpected cost received at the end of the year.

Park said she walked the facilities and checked the meters with the representative and he had no suggestion for for ways to save money. He said everything is running very efficiently and there are no problems with the systems. "The answer is, we just have large buildings," said Park.

Recalibration of the heating system is going on over the summer, which will hopefully cause heat to be more evenly distributed during the winter, as some classrooms would need to open their windows last year, while other students had to wear their coats during class.

In addition, the schools are looking at possibly joining a co-op for purchasing gas through the South Shore Educational Collaborative. Joining the co-op would save the schools roughly $6,000 in gas next year.

The schools will be looking to find a contact person to discuss the electricity being used by the schools. The schools currently have an $8,000 difference between what was spent and what was budgeted for electricity, which will hopefully be able to be absorbed within the school's budget.

Shop gives village a new Twist

and items for babies. She also has a special line of holiday items for the whole family.

At Twist, McCarthy offers her own line of baby items, which includes clothing, bedding, layette sets, and plush toys. For children and adults, she has designed a line of jean skirts with colored pom-poms, netting, and beads for added flair. She also has items for the kitchen, including brightly colored plates and mugs, tiles with colorful cartoon images and sayings like, "New shoes cure the blues." In addition, McCarthy has a wide assortment of jewelry, ranging from crystals to beads to silver pieces.

For those who are crafty, McCarthy said she will bring in more items for scrap-booking, which she said has really taken off in other parts of the country, but hasn't caught on quite so heavily in Massachusetts. She hopes to put a spark in that trend, and bring the fun to the Northeast.

McCarthy said Twist has a little something for everyone, although she said she might need to find a few more things to fulfill the testosterone quotient. "We need more guy stuff – that's what the guys say," she joked.

Opening her own shop is something McCarthy said she and her husband Gene have been discussing for years. Gene owns his own business, McCarthy Landscaping, based out of Scituate, and Sue has considered starting a business of her own many times. "It was something we'd thought about, and I was never really going to do it, and look at me now," she said.

Gene originally saw the former telecommunication company site for rent, and approached Sue with the idea. They decided to go for it, and Sue opened her doors during the Festival on the Common this July.

However, before McCarthy could open, the shop needed some major improvements. Gene, who is fortunately very good with his hands, took down walls and made some repairs, and with a few coats of paint, the shop was given a personality that wasn't there before.

While McCarthy used to have to travel to shows around the country to sell her creations, she now has a place where they, and the products of other talented artists she has met along the way, can be displayed. Even with a shop of her own, McCarthy said she will still travel as much as she did before, which will enable her to bring items to the people of Cohasset they may never have seen before. In fact, she will travel to New York for a show this week. "There are always more goodies to be found," she said, adding she will constantly be changing the inventory in her shop to keep it fresh and exciting. "There's just so much cool stuff out there."

McCarthy said she buys whatever she likes and those items make the cut at Twist. "I don't know how to buy stuff everyone else likes," she said, adding, "I have to really like it and be able to get excited about it," to be able to purchase it, and what usually draws her to an item is fun and color.

While Twist has only been open for a little more than a month, McCarthy said things have been going very well. She said there have been many people who have told here there is nothing else like it in the area, and she is happy to oblige.

The most exciting part for McCarthy in opening her own shop has been the uncertainty of it all. She said with any new business, "You go into it thinking, 'Is this going to work?' and you don't ever know." However, she said things have been going really well for Twist, and she only expects things to grow from here. "Christmas is going to be wild," she said.

Twist, located at 21A South Main Street, is open every day from 10-5, with extended hours during "A Sampling of Village Hospitality," held every Thursday from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. until early fall. For more information, please call Sue "Dreamer" McCarthy at 781-383-4002, or visit her Web site at www.suedreamer.com.

20-YEAR REUNION

The CHS Class of 1984 held our 20 year Reunion this past weekend and it was so much fun. It is wonderful to see everyone and hear about their lives today, what everyone is doing and to hear about the last 20 years.

We were able to reminisce a bit and look forward to our 25th. We had several of our teachers turn out for our Tour of the new and updated CHS which for so many was a highlight of the weekend. Many thanks go out to everyone who took part in making this a weekend to remember.

To all of you who were a part of the weekend, lets make sure to stay in touch.

FAMILY POWER HOUR

Summer is going way too fast for me and my family. I am hoping to stop and enjoy August as much as we can and not stress over the approaching start of school and all that comes with it. Between camping, swimming, going to the beach and visiting with friends and family, I hope to spend some alone time with each of our children and really connect with them before the craziness of the school year begins.

I am also going to put some thought into a "Family Power Hour" and would like to extend the invitation to all families in Cohasset who would be interested. Although it is still in the very early stages, it is very apparent to me that we need some more time as a society to spend time as families and friends without the intrusion of phones, computers and basically life issues. I would love some input on how this could be done 1-3 times a week and include some exercise time as a family(possible at the track at CHS?) and also include maybe some music/games/family picnics etc.

If anyone has some ideas or would like to be involved in this, please email or call me. I got the idea from a family in Florida and they started a similar program three years ago and it is going strong and includes so many people that it went into a two-hour program!

That is all for this week. Make sure to send me in anything you have for the column at:

Paintings that look good enough to eat

Polomis artwork in library exhibit

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

It only takes a quick trip to the kitchen for Ted Polomis to become inspired. What others see as merely fruits and vegetables, he sees as interesting subjects for his oil painting, and for Polomis, the more exotic and unusual, the better.

In the tradition of many great artists Polomis paints still lifes in the style of classical realism. While he frequently features apples and pears in his paintings, Polomis said one of his favorite objects to paint are gourds. While he said gourds are often overlooked, he finds them very interesting to paint because of their unusual shapes and combinations of color and texture. "You have to find an object you really like," in order to be able to paint it well, he said.

Although every piece he creates looks as if it could almost be a photograph, Polomis says he never tries to replicate exactly what he sees. "A lot of it is my own interpretation," he said, adding he never paints from photographs because it creating a two-dimensional piece from a two-dimensional object doesn't allow him to express the depth he sees in real life. However, by being able to turn his head and see the actual contours of the subject from many different angles, the attention to detail Polomis adds to his paintings makes them look good enough to eat.

"A lot of it is my own interpretation."
— Ted Polomis

As a South Shore Art Center Gallery Artist, Polomis will be sharing a variety of his creations in the gallery at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library until Aug. 30. All 18 pieces are oil paintings on masonite which he says give each creation a very reel feel. Masonite is a hard material which has a very smooth surface, and allows the paint to flow evenly across the top. Polomis said with other materials such as canvas, the shapes painted tend to become textured within the grooves, and he thinks the finished product is more realistic on a smooth surface.

Ted Polomis stands by some of his paintings that are on exhibit at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Using oil paints takes time and patience, as each layer needs to dry before the next can be created, which means Polomis sometimes has roughly six paintings going at once. He said he has never once sat down and created an entire oil painting in one sitting, because the layers of glaze and paint need to applied just right to make the objects really come alive.

Polomis has been painting since he was a young boy growing up in Hanson. He was introduced to oil painting while attending Thayer Academy, and went on to study art during college at the Rhode Island School of Design. During his junior year, Polomis studied abroad in Rome, Italy. It was there that he had a wonderful professor by the name of Tom Sgouros. While other professors were assigning weekly papers, Polomis said Sgouros encouraged his students to "See everything, and go everywhere you can," because the opportunity might not present itself again. Polomis took his professor's advice and traveled to 13 countries studying art along the way. "I even went to Scotland to see a painting," he said.

While Polomis is currently focusing on still-life oil paintings, there was a time when he was painting many landscapes with watercolors. While his interest in art has always remained a constant, his ability to find the time to paint has been a challenge. When Polomis and his wife Dorothy moved to Marshfield Hills 5 years ago, he originally had aspirations of being able to paint wonderful seascapes and rocky coasts. But painting landscapes requires daylight, and with work there isn't always enough time.

But when the Polomises moved into their Marshfield home, suddenly he found he had the space to dedicate one room entirely to painting, which encouraged him to pick up his brushes once more. Polomis who works as an illustrator/graphic designer by day allows him to be artistic, but not in the same way painting does. "After a while, you want to do something where you can use your hands," and see something created before your eyes rather than on a computer screen, he said.

Polomis began painting with oils again because still lifes can be painted anywhere at any time of day. He would come home from work and could still paint even without any daylight. Any object around the house could serve as his subject, and through much practice, he has reached a point where his paintings are receiving wonderful reviews.

Polomis' exhibit began at the library on July 2, and he said the response so far has been overwhelming. He said everyone from the library employees to those at the South Shore Art Center who helped coordinate the exhibit, to his co-workers, family, friends and wife have been very supportive.

"Dorothy has been great," he said, adding she has steered many of his paintings in different directions than he had originally envisioned, and they turned out even better than he had planned. Dorothy has also designed a Web site displaying some of Polomis' artwork.

Polomis said one of his good friends has also been very supportive and came over one day with a box of different items including jugs made from pottery and different bowls for him to paint, hoping to provide some inspiration. Two of the paintings currently on exhibit were painted using objects from that box.

"I'm just so grateful for all the support," he said, adding when he began doing oil paintings he didn't know how his work would be received. "When you paint, you never know if anyone else will like it," he said, but the 12 paintings he has sold as a result of his exhibit are a good indication. "For me, it's just something I have to do."

The library gallery is open Monday, Tuesday and Thursday from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., and Friday and Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. The Paul Pratt Memorial Library is located at 35 Ripley Road. For more information, please call the South Shore Art Center at (781).383-2787. Polomis will have another exhibit on display this November at the Hingham Library. A shopper's holiday

"Taxachusetts" is going to lose its hard-earned reputation if it keeps this up.

In an effort to boost a somewhat sluggish economy, the state Legislature decided to do away with the 5 percent sales tax for one day this summer. The first-ever tax-free "holiday" will be celebrated at department stores, malls, jewelers, and electronic stores throughout the state this Saturday, Aug. 14 as Massachusetts consumers are being enticed to shop until they drop.

With the good news of tax-free spending, however, comes a lot of confusion and questions surrounding the holiday. Some business owners on the South Shore are not quite certain what this tax-free holiday means for them. While some were unsure if the products they sell are included in the program, others are still unclear just days before as to how they were supposed to record and report their Aug. 14 sales to the Department of Revenue. Others were just learning about the initiative this week through newspaper articles and television news reports.

By all means we're not intending to look a gift horse in the mouth, but there appears to have been a lack of communication between the state agencies and the consumers and business owners on what exactly will happen Saturday.

Here's what we know:

- All non-business purchases of retail goods and "tangible personal property" under $2,500 will be exempt from the state's 5 percent sales tax Saturday. Anyone buying an item costing more than $1,000 will have to sign a document stating it is for personal use only.
- The tax reprieve does not apply to big-ticket items such as cars, boats, motorcycles, or restaurant meals and utilities.
- To qualify, consumers must fully pay for an item with cash, check, debit authorization or credit card on Aug. 14.
- Sales and discounts (including coupons) that lower a product's price below the $2,500 threshold on Aug. 14 will also qualify.

The potential savings for consumers and revenue generated for Massachusetts businesses (the holiday is expected to generate more than $200 million in retail sales) could result in a significant financial hit for the state, as it is being predicted Massachusetts could lose anywhere between $6 million and $10 million in revenue.

What the state is hoping for in return is a shot in the arm for the economy that will get consumers in spending mode as retailers gear up for the busy holiday shopping season. The main theory behind having the "tax-free" holiday at the end of the summer was to spur back-to-school shopping. But that theory may not make the grade. When you think of what back to school shopping entails for most parents and students, it's clothing. Clothing that costs less than $175 is always tax free in Massachusetts. The other aspect of back to school shopping is school supplies, such as notebooks, pencils, erasers, and folders — hardly budget busters for most families even with the 5 percent sales tax tacked on.

The buzz on the street is the tax-free holiday will be a boon for stores selling electronic items. Home computers, digital cameras, stereo equipment could be some of the hot ticket items scooped up Saturday. Jewelry could also be a big seller. While students returning to school may need laptop or desktop computers and new watches, the majority of items sold Saturday will likely have little or nothing to do with going back to school.

And it may not have the long-term effect proponents are expecting. State officials are counting on the one-time tax reprieve, part of an economic stimulus package passed by the state Legislature in November 2003, to trigger additional spending on clothing and school supplies in the weeks before Labor Day, historically a slow shopping season. But some economic experts have questioned the holiday's merits, noting that a jump in spending Saturday will simply lead to slower-than-normal shopping activity for the rest of the back-to-school season.

Like many of the retailers we spoke to this week, we're not exactly sure what's in store for Saturday. But we do know the government is giving us a break and opportunities like this do not come along very often in this state.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Revitalization of downtown Cohasset

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing to express my concern about the status of the revitalization of the downtown and the emergence of yet another committee formed to further revise a plan that was voted on at Town Meeting last fall. The town seems to have reached a point of dysfunction regarding its ability to make a final decision about his project. As a result, I would like the Board of Selectmen to address the following:

1. What was the original dollar amount budgeted for design work by the Waterfield Design Group and how much has actually been spent to date?
2. What, if any, additional dollar amount has been spent since this new committee decided to revise the plan town residents already voted on?
3. How many people on this committee actually have a professional background in the design of New England streetscapes excluding the Waterfield Design Group?
4. Why is the Board of Selectmen, and the Town Manager for that matter, disregarding the town vote that was already taken on this project that includes concrete sidewalks, no sinking of electrical lines, and vintage lighting attached to telephone poles? (Perhaps the town's legal counsel could opine on the legal right of the new committee to override the democratic process in this town.)
5. This new committee made a recommendation to switch from concrete sidewalks to a less expensive asphalt option and to eliminate the vintage lighting. In addition to the additional maintenance required for asphalt, does this suggest that funding deadlines have been missed for this project?
6. It was reported last week in the Cohasset Mariner that changes to the plan made by the new committee will be submitted to Waterfield Design Group by Aug. 12 to be incorporated by Aug. 28. This seems to suggest that additional money is being allocated to the Waterfield budget and that the new committee's plan will be rushed through without any Town Meeting input. Is this an accurate assessment of the facts?

I look forward to hearing from the Board of Selectmen on these issues shortly.

Schools praised

TO THE EDITOR:

I am grateful that more youths were not involved in the recent destruction and partying in Cohasset. My hat is off to the Cohasset schools in recognition of the excellent job done in instilling the values of respect and responsibility in the students, who go or have gone to Cohasset schools.

Hedlund, Bradley secure funds for bridge repair

The Legislature has adopted a provision offered by Sen. Robert L. Hedlund and Rep. Garrett Bradley that provides funding for repairs to the Border Street bridge. The bridge, which is a site of historic importance in Cohasset, is showing signs of degradation and needs to be repaired. The earmark for $300,000 was included in the final version of the Transportation Bond Bill that was passed on the final day of the 2003-04 Legislative Session. Recent rough winters have accelerated the rate of decay of the Border St. bridge and have made repairs more urgent. The repairs will cost around $300,000 and will stabilize the bridge's condition for years to come.

"The bridge is currently at the point where by repairing now will significantly extend the life of the bridge," said Sen. Hedlund. "Without these repairs, we will be looking at a costly replacement process in the upcoming years."

"Repairing this bridge is an important safety priority. Spending money now will save us significant money in the future," stated Rep. Bradley. Sen. Hedlund and I were able to convince the legislature of the importance of this project. I am hopeful the Governor concurs."

The Transportation Bond Bill next goes before Gov. Romney who then has 10 days to decide whether to veto or sign the legislation.

Town gets preparedness grant

The town's application for a Local Preparedness Grant has been approved, allowing the town to spend an additional $12,820, thanks to the Executive Office of Public Safety. The grant allows the town to spend money for costs covered as authorized expenditures. Money can be spent for items such as detection equipment, including products for chemical detection, radiation, and explosives, or maintenance of and training on pieces of equipment.

Three days before opening ceremonies

DISPATCH FROM ATHENS

MIKE ELLIS

Former Cohasset resident Michael Ellis migrated west to Colorado soon after graduating CHS ('82), but still maintains a room on Tower Lane.

Athens is now a city transformed. When my wife Ellen and I arrived here 18 months ago to work on the games, we were as curious as our Greek friends as to exactly how this overgrown village of 5 million was going to welcome the world for an Olympic homecoming.

Not that the city wasn't already transforming — but the growth was more like a kid's tree house — scavenged materials patched together with bent nails, and the occasional trap door. To Athenians and foreigners alike, it seemed as though everything was under construction. From the sewer main in front of your house to the Olympic stadium, someone was digging a ditch on almost every corner. The airport light rail was still on the drafting table, and the coastal tram a hostage to municipal bickering. Often we would joke that we could never get to work the same way twice — the path usually blocked in the morning by a spontaneous concrete pour or a broken water main.

Just as recently as a month ago, I was touring the Olympic stadium complex and wondered how two square miles of dirt and debris could possibly metamorphose into an Olympic promenade. However, I'm happy to report that I revisited the same area yesterday before the opening ceremonies dress rehearsal, and found the hot, choking dirt replaced with spraying fountains and abstract sculptures. The butterfly has wings!

Not even the Greeks themselves thought it possible. Many laughed that starting the race just as good as finishing. "We Greeks always leave everything to the last minute, that's how we motivate ourselves," they would say with a strange mixture of pride and disgust. It was as if they were saying, "Look, you run your race and we'll run ours. We can start whenever we want, stop for a coffee and cigarette, and can still win if we feel like it." A cocky strategy and one which has often backfired. However, in this important case, the gamble has paid off.

But the modern Greek is truly a remarkable — if not a bit perplexing — person. I was at the ancient Panathanaeko stadium in downtown Athens when the Greeks celebrated their victory in the Euro 2004 Soccer championships. The event likely made only page three of most US sports sections, but was the biggest thing to hit Greece since World War II. To celebrate, 200,000 people waving Greek flags jammed in and around the cramped, old marble stadium that hosted the 1896 games. It was pure, ecstatic mayhem when the team finally arrived! Young and old were pinned in place for hours, sometimes magically lifted off their feet from the pressure. Yet there were no accidents, no fights — nothing but bliss and pride. Try doing that almost anywhere else....

Among the variety of attitudes and ideals that motivate the modern Greek, the one I find most fascinating is their ancient concept of "philotimo." This word, they are proud to note, cannot be translated into any other language. Imagine that! A Greek word they won't loan! When you try to help them define "philotimo" in such simplistic terms as "pride" and "honor," they scoff and tell you that is much more complex than that. Then, almost to a man, they point to the goosebumps on their arm, and say in a quivering voice that it is "impossible" to describe, but remains the highest personal ideal to which one can ascribe. If you are not Greek, you cannot understand, they infer. For my part, if their spoken English weren't so good, I would have guessed "philotimo" meant goosebumps.

So, it's this strange cocktail of strong coffee and philotimo which has remade this ancient city into something more than the just the home of the Acropolis, and worthy of the world's attention. The Albanian workforce was a big help too. Regardless, it has not been on the cheap, and my Greek friends groan and hope their great-grandchildren will finally be able to pay it all off. Ten billion euros might seem expensive for a month-long party, but without the torch of the Olympics, many say, it would have been almost impossible to muster the political will to complete a new ring road, update the national highway system, construct the world's longest suspension bridge, not to mention the new light rail system and coastal tram.

As the smallest country yet to host the Olympics, our Greek friends have invested much of their energy, passion, smarts, "philotimo," and pretty much everything they have in anticipation of these games. So, as you enjoy the games on TV, please keep in mind that Greece is a rich and complicated modern country, not easily reduced to "Zorba the Greek" or "My Big Fat Greek Wedding" stereotypes. Many of our Greek co-workers have spent a big chunk of their academic life abroad, speak multiple languages, and are willing to discuss anything both abstractly, and with great passion! These same people also enjoy spending weekends in their village vacation home with extended family, harvesting their small crop of olive trees or making wine. In many ways, they are just like us, and would prefer to be judged by history, rather than the last six months of negative reporting by people who have yet to set foot in their country. Our history is now, my friends tell me. We certainly hope you will enjoy it, but you can be sure we will!

Mr. Ellis has agreed to update us weekly during the course of the Athens 2004 Summer Olympic Games.

Courting Viagra

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

It looks like America's two most popular indoor sports are going to the mattress over the world's most popular drug since penicillin.

Pfizer, the world's most successful drug maker (outside of a couple of guys from Colombia), is fixing to take legal action against a bunch of online pharmacies and spammers who have been peddling illegal versions of Viagra.

What's more American than (1) taking someone to court and (2) doing that other thing? If you said (1) baseball and (2) apple pie then you're stranded somewhere to the right of William McKinley. But I digress . . .

Perhaps you've seen the ads hustling Viagra on the marketing page of USA Today. Not that I went looking for them for personal reasons but it's hard to miss them if you're a devotee of the newspaper's crossword puzzle.

ViaMedic.com boasts that it has been in business for all of six years, offering Viagra, Cialis and Levitra in a "safe, secure and discreet" manner.

Another Web site, known only by its toll-free telephone number, offers something that is "stronger than Viagra, Cialis and Levitra . . . works immediately . . . and one free month."

Yet another promises 10 tablets for $99 with free overnight shipping . . . well, you get the idea.

Pfizer has the best of all reasons for suing to see that brides all over the world go to sleep with smiles on their faces.

The little blue pill was worth $1.9 billion in world sales last year alone and the company that has dibs on them is facing legal competition from Eli Lilly & Icos' Cialis and GlaxoSmithKline and Bayer's Levitra.

That's a lot of money even after you pay a former U. S. Senate Majority Leader — or in Levitra's case, a former Chicago Bears football coach — to hustle them for you on the tube.

I don't know about Cialis but I understand Eli Lilly & Icos is watching Bill Clinton closely, ready to pounce if and when he loses his fast ball. But again I digress . . .

Pfizer, of course, being the people-oriented pharmaceutical company that it is, says it worries about the effect fraudulent Viagra might have on those who buy it.

"We're concerned consumers are buying products that are harmful to them," said Bryant Haskins, a Pfizer spokesman. Yes, that and $1.9 billion is bound to get you sued.

Pfizer has sued five Web sites for trademark infringement and has filed other suits aimed at seizing the names of their sites where it claims they are selling fake Viagra. They say it's easy to tell when the Viagra is a fake.

It is estimated that Viagra, real and fraudulent, is being sold or advertised on 350,000 Web sites and, hold your breath, now, some seven trillion junk mail messages have offered it for sale.

That tells you something but I can't for the life of me figure out what.

HEALTH NOTES

Catching skin cancer early is the key

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Skin cancer is the most common of all cancers. Half of all Americans will develop skin cancer at least once. It often develops at a much earlier age than most cancers, and the older a person is, the more likely he or she is to develop skin cancer. Although moles are non-cancerous, having at least one mole on an arm or leg doubles the risk of skin cancer. About 95 percent of skin cancers are almost always curable, but one type: malignant melanoma develops in the pigment producing skin cells and grows uncontrollably, aggressively invading surrounding tissues. The American Cancer Society estimates that the number of cases of melanoma rises by 7 to 11 percent each year, faster than any other cancer in America.

Fortunately, skin cancer is one of the most preventable cancers. So, while proper skin protection is always important, outdoor activities during the summer months require diligence. Simple steps such as using sunscreen, wearing a hat, and avoiding the sun when its rays are the strongest, are easy ways to help prevent skin cancer. This message is particularly important for children and adolescents, since skin cancer is commonly associated with excessive ultraviolet light (UV) exposure before the age of 18. It's generally much later when the cancer finally develops.

You've got a lot of skin, about 20 square feet of it. You can improve your chances of finding skin cancer promptly by performing a simple skin self-exam regularly. The best time to do this self-exam is after a shower or bath. You should check your skin in a well-lighted room using a full-length mirror and a hand-held mirror. It's best to begin by learning where your birthmarks, moles, and blemishes are and what they usually look like. Check for anything new — a change in the size, texture, or color of a mole, or a sore that does not heal.

1. Look at the front and back of your body in the mirror, then raise your arms and look at the left and right sides.

2. Bend your elbows and look carefully at your palms; forearms, including the undersides; and the upper arms.

3. Examine the back and front of your legs.

4. Sit and closely examine your feet, including the soles and the spaces between the toes.

5. Look at your face, neck, and scalp. You may want to use a comb or a blow dryer to move hair so that you can see better.

By checking your skin regularly, you will become familiar with what is normal. If you find anything unusual, see your doctor right away. Remember, the earlier skin cancer is found, the better the chance for cure. Doctors should also look at the skin during routine physical exams. People who have already had skin cancer should be sure to have regular exams so that the doctor can check the skin — both the treated areas and other places where cancer may develop.

When an area of skin does not look normal, the doctor may remove all or part of the growth. This is called a biopsy. To check for cancer cells, the tissue is examined under a microscope by a pathologist or a dermatologist. A biopsy is the only sure way to tell if the problem is cancer.

Doctors generally divide skin cancer into two stages: local (affecting only the skin) or metastatic (spreading beyond the skin). Because skin cancer rarely spreads, a biopsy often is the only test needed to determine the stage. In cases where the growth is very large or has been present for a long time, the doctor will carefully check the lymph nodes in the area. In addition, the patient may need to have additional tests, such as special x-rays, to find out whether the cancer has spread to other parts of the body. Knowing the stage of a skin cancer helps the doctor plan the best treatment. But the best way to avoid costly and sometimes painful treatment is to know the warning signs, examine your skin periodically, and, if you find something you aren't comfortable with, seek an expert opinion early.

Folks meet and greet new police chief at two receptions

Hussey wants a friendlier force

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Police Chief James Hussey might be the most popular guy in town.

Not only did two receptions in his honor at private homes last week draw a combined crowd of about 125 people — but he's been known to stop his car and get out to direct traffic at the busy lower King Street/Rte. 3A intersection when he sees a backup there on his way to work.

He's encouraged his officers to do the same.

Hussey has also had the tint removed from the windshields of Cohasset cruisers and will eliminate the military-style trousers from the closets of his officers, opting for straight-leg pants that don't tuck into boots.

"I couldn't see who was in a (police) car coming toward me," Hussey said about the tinted windows. "I thought 'that's a barrier, that's not healthy.'"

Hussey's efforts are all part of providing a more, user-friendly police force that is in touch with the community it serves, he told the crowd at Wig Pierson's Atlantic Avenue home last Wednesday and Lou Harvey's home on King Street last Thursday.

Selectmen hired Hussey — who is on a leave of absence from the Boston Police Department — as interim chief after chief Robert Jackson retired. The town had been torn apart by a nine-month-long saga at the police department involving two officers who were placed on paid administrative leave amid allegations of abuse of police power. The officers deny any wrongdoing and returned to work the beginning of July. Former town manager Mark Haddad, who suspended the officers, abruptly resigned in May.

Hussey — who signed a year-long contract and has indicated he would like to stay longer — said he is looking forward not back.

"For the youth and elderly, which are the two most critical populations in town, we will do everything we can."
— Police Chief James Hussey

Hussey, who is planning to survey the town to determine what it wants and expects from its police department, will also formulate — with the community's help — a policy on how to handle youth first-time offenders. He said he is not a fan of "zero tolerance" where teens are automatically arrested for offenses such as underage drinking.

He prefers bringing the parents in to try and change future behavior without necessarily an arrest and trip to court. However, Hussey made it very clear that underage drinking is against the law and should not be condoned or tolerated.

"There's a reason why the drinking age is 21," he said. "When alcohol gets abused by someone – especially a young person, nothing good can come of it.

"We have to take a hard line not to allow underage drinking – it's not OK."

Hussey praised the department and said the town "has a great group of officers who were waiting for someone who could pull them together so we are all on the same page."

He also plans to set up a police advisory council that will include citizens-at-large, members of the clergy, town and school officials and police officers to work on issues involving crime and quality of life.

Hussey explained the rules and regulations at the police department are in the process of being updated. He is also talking to chiefs of other police departments about their policies on pursuits, for example.

At least one person wasn't concerned with internal issues. Althea Stamp, who attended the reception at the Pierson home, asked the chief what he was doing to protect the town against terrorists who could possibly use submarines to attack Cohasset. Hussey said police rely on the Coast Guard and said he planned to sit down with the emergency management committee in town.

Stamp was also concerned about door-to-door solicitors, "We open our door to everyone here in Cohasset," she said.

Hussey said police were limited about how much they could do to restrict solicitors but suggested Stamp call the police to make sure they had checked in with the department.

The chief said he planned to have an officer become more involved in the schools and the department would also focus on the elderly.

"For the youth and elderly — the two most critical populations in town — we will do everything we can," he said.

A resident at the reception at Harvey's King Street home praised Hussey for getting the officers back to work and asked if wounds in the department were healing.

"I can't go back and change history," Hussey said. "But I won't stand for people who don't treat each other with dignity and respect."

But with that being said he added, "police officers aren't magicians. They are human and have bad days and I allow them to have one on occasion."

The survey is part of Hussey's community outreach efforts that also include taking advantage of all opportunities to interact with residents and businesses either at receptions like two held last week in private homes, at the Rotary Club or Chamber of Commerce Meetings or before the Cohasset Historical Society.

"It's a good starting block," Hussey said about the survey. "It will give us a handle on the way people see things.

"It can be perception versus reality – and this will let us know how people perceive things," he said.

Plans are to put the results on a spread sheet, analyze them and see what adjustments the police need to make, if any.

Hussey said he did his homework by examining surveys conducted by other police departments.

Selectmen didn't think the question "what's your race?" was relevant because Cohasset lacks racial diversity. They also thought the question about income range might be "touchy" and put some people off.

But Hussey pointed out that someone making $50,000 a year in Cohasset may view things differently than someone making more that $100,000.

"It could be an eye-opener," he said.

Hussey said he'd like to get the survey out before Labor Day and have a 30-day window for people to respond. Police will have copies of the survey available at the library, Town Hall and other public places. The Mariner has offered to print the survey in the paper at no cost. The Mariner reaches upwards of 80 percent of the households in town.

Busy month for police department

July was a busy month for the Cohasset Police Department, there were 21 arrests; one for operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license; one for operating under the influence of liquor; four for minor in possession of liquor; two for possession of a Class D substance; two for assault and battery, one for assault and battery with a dangerous weapon; five for malicious destruction of property, and finally five for protective custody, Police Chief James Hussey said.

During the month of July the police department investigated 18 motor vehicle accidents; two of which resulted in personal injury.

During the month of July the police department investigated 18 motor vehicle accidents; two of which resulted in personal injury. There were 37 motor vehicle citations issued totaling $875 In fines. Additionally, there were 107 parking tickets issued totaling $2,650 in fines, Hussey said.

Also in the month of July the Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 1,061 calls for police services of those 103 were Emergency 9-1-1 calls.

In the month of July there were four charges of breaking and entering: one of a residence, one of a town building, and two private businesses. There were also 8 criminal complaints issued for the month, Hussey said.

Sidewalk treatment for village streets is still up in the air

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Cohasset residents need to pay attention to what's under their feet when they walk in the village.

A visit to Scituate Harbor — near the new Mill Wharf Cinema — is also in order because selectmen said there is a range of sidewalk material there including concrete pavers, poured concrete, brick and asphalt.

Sidewalk treatment is one of the final pieces of the village revitalization puzzle that needs to be in place so long-anticipated improvements can get underway. The $1.5 million project is being paid for through state grants, not local property taxes.

But perhaps nothing — shy of the infamous bump-outs proposed at village corners last year — has caused as much consternation as what type of sidewalk surface would be suitable, attractive and safe for Cohasset Village.

A month ago, the Downtown Village Revitalization Review Committees opted for asphalt. Now concrete brick-like pavers are the first choice among a majority of committee members because they are more in keeping with the concept approved at last fall's special town meeting when voters decided on concrete over brick.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris, who is also on the village review committee, is the lone holdout. She strongly feels voters opted for poured concrete and should be given the chance to revisit the issue this fall if a different material is utilized.

Selectmen voted to put the project out to bid with a menu of sidewalk materials as bid alternates. The issue could still come back to the special Town Meeting and plans are to provide a sample of concrete pavers and colored, poured concrete with a border along the James Way walk-through next to the Citgo Station.

McMorris and fellow Selectman Ralph Dormitzer, who is chairman of the downtown revitalization review committee, are at odds over which way to go.

Dormitzer is a proponent of concrete pavers, which McMorris describes as slippery and not holding up well.

"Entire downtown Boston has pavers and half the driveways in town," Dormitzer said. "Concrete is worse than pavers."

Town Counsel has said selectmen have the authority to decide what sidewalk material to use because last fall's special Town Meeting only approved a concept. But Town Counsel also said while legally the board could decide on a different material, it may have a moral obligation to follow the wishes of the voters.

In a related matter, Dormitzer said the downtown committee would also like to bury the wires under South Main Street and remove the poles. He said utility work could get underway while the town decides on the sidewalk material.

On the utility issue, he pointed out the electrical service to the shops on South Main Street is actually on the poles along Elm Street that would remain.. The South Main Street poles in the village only have telephone and cable wires. Burying those wires and removing those poles would have a huge impact in the village, he said.

There is $1.2 million left for the village project, Dormitzer said.

Village plans also include the addition of 24 trees. Selectmen have asked the tree committee for guidance in determining what type of trees to plant.

It is still unclear what the MBTA plans are for the Pleasant Street/Ripley Road intersection near the entrance to the town parking lot. Selectmen will request a meeting with Cashman Balfour Beatty, which is building the train, to get a better idea of what those plans are.

Other village plans include a sidewalk with a rolling curb that motor vehicles and fire trucks can ride up on if necessary along the ledge under St. Stephen's Church.

It is expected that the village project will go out to bid the end of the month.

Let the Games begin

FROM THE SIDELINES

JULIE ANN NEVERO

For as long as I can remember, I have always loved the Summer Olympic Games. It's 16 days of drama, great stories, upsets, patriotism, and glory and I just revel in all of it, really almost since birth. My parents have informed me that even as a young girl, I would be glued to the TV watching the action that I adorably referred to as the "Micmics." (Not to toot my own horn but c'mon, that's cute).

As opposed to the Winter Games, where I — like much of the country, I would assume — only watch the ice skating (thank-you Tanya and Nancy), no Summer Games sport is off-limits for me. A track girl at heart, it is this particular sport that I most enjoy watching, but I am also captivated by several others like swimming, diving, gymnastics, volleyball (beach and indoor), badminton… (you must know I'm kidding on that last one). Really, though, it's all great and I can't wait for the action to begin Friday night in Athens, the site where it all began.

I think what I've always liked best about the Summer Olympics is that they feature ordinary people (well, that is until basketball went pro. Remember the 1992 Dream Team? Yeah, like that was fair). They are those hard-working athletes who exist on every field, court, pool, and track in the country who've overcome trials and tribulations to live out their dreams on a world stage. I've always felt they are so inspiring and I'm an absolute sucker for their stories. I love watching the extensive feature coverage of those athletes whose stories of getting to the Games are told to the tune of some sappy piano riff. (Let's just say my Kleenex is never out of arm's reach).

To put it bluntly, they are the type of athletes every kid aspires to be, but are among the few who have the guts, determination, and talent to make it.

I can remember being one of those hopefuls growing up. Too young to really remember Flo-Jo, it was Jackie Joyner-Kersee whom I idolized in the late 80s, early 90s as a high school and collegiate track athlete. I've been told that after practically running out of my mother's womb, I just never stopped and once I became involved in track, the gold medal-winning heptathlete and long jumper was everything I aspired to be.

But even before then, during the grade school years, I can remember challenging the kids in my Pembroke neighborhood to races. I would crouch down in the set position, pretending to be like the runners I'd seen in blocks at the start of the Olympic 100-meters, and dash around our track-oval like street. I lived for "Field Day" while attending Bryantville Elementary because we got to compete for ribbons. (Secretly I wished they were medals, but I took what I got).

But it was during my days as a high school track standout at Cardinal Spellman where I was most inspired by the Summer Games. I knew I could run fast, but I was always looking for a field event to excel in. So, I looked to Joyner-Kersee. As a heptathlete, she would compete

Cohasset 14-year old all-stars win Suburban League championship

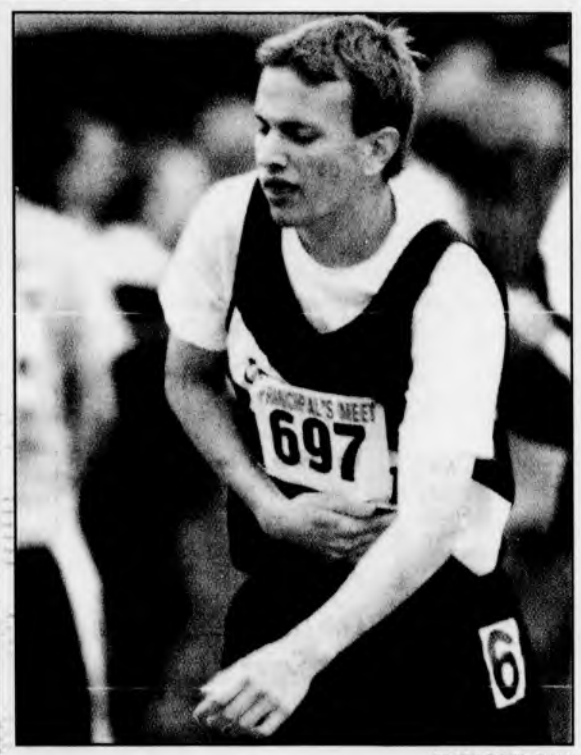
By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

So, Cohasset's not a baseball town, huh?

There are coaches and players from at least eight separate programs right now that would unanimously disagree with that assessment.

The Cohasset 14-year old all-star team captured the nine-team Suburban League championship, Sunday afternoon at Milliken Field, with a thrilling 3-2 win over Cedar Grove of Dorchester.

"We played some good baseball this summer," said head coach Mark DeGiacomo, who also coached this core group of players up through the summer Little League ranks. "We made the plays in the field, we got some very good pitching and we were an aggressive team. We didn't always pound the ball, but we got some big hits when we needed them."



Cody Morgan went the distance on the mound Sunday, striking out seven while surrendering just three hits and two walks.

The game was a seesaw affair.

Cedar Grove broke the ice with a solo run in the top of the second, taking advantage of an error and two stolen bases.

Cohasset flip-flopped the advantage in the bottom of the fourth, as Sam DeGiacomo singled home both Tommy Chase and Cohasset High trackster Adam Harawacz obviously gave it all he had in this 800-meter race. According to reports, Adam wasn't the only one to give it his all with the CHS squad. Unfortunately, no one from this team made our All-Scholastic squad for this spring. Anyone interested in seeing that team should go to cohassetmariner.com.

All-Scholastic boys track team

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Several of the young men you see listed below as "Honorable Mentions" received serious consideration for All-Scholastic acknowledgement.

The Cohasset High boys team finished with an 0-5 record. With only six males participating on the team this year, though, that seemed hardly shocking

CHS assistant coach Lisa Mullen summed up the situation in four words: "We need more people!"

Harvard-bound Erik Belz snagged a League All Star award for his 54.2 time in the

MIKE SPELLMAN

I know I stopped thinking of athletes as role models a long, loooong time ago. So I guess I just lost sight of how much youngsters still hold them up as the ideal.

I got a harsh reminder a couple of Sunday afternoons back I was tossing a wiffle ball in to my six-year old. Well, after a poorly aimed throw plunked him off the head, my first year T-Ball alum told me we had to fight. He then dropped the bat, charged me and started swinging playfully.

It took me a few seconds before I caught on… the extracurricular activities in the Red Sox-Yankees game the previous day. D'oh!

Naturally, I laughed heartily. It didn't take long, though, before I switched over the coach/dad mode and explained to him that those players on TV were acting like idiots and how real baseball players never fight.

So take this as a friendly reminder parents: Be on your toes. You never know from where those influences are going to come.

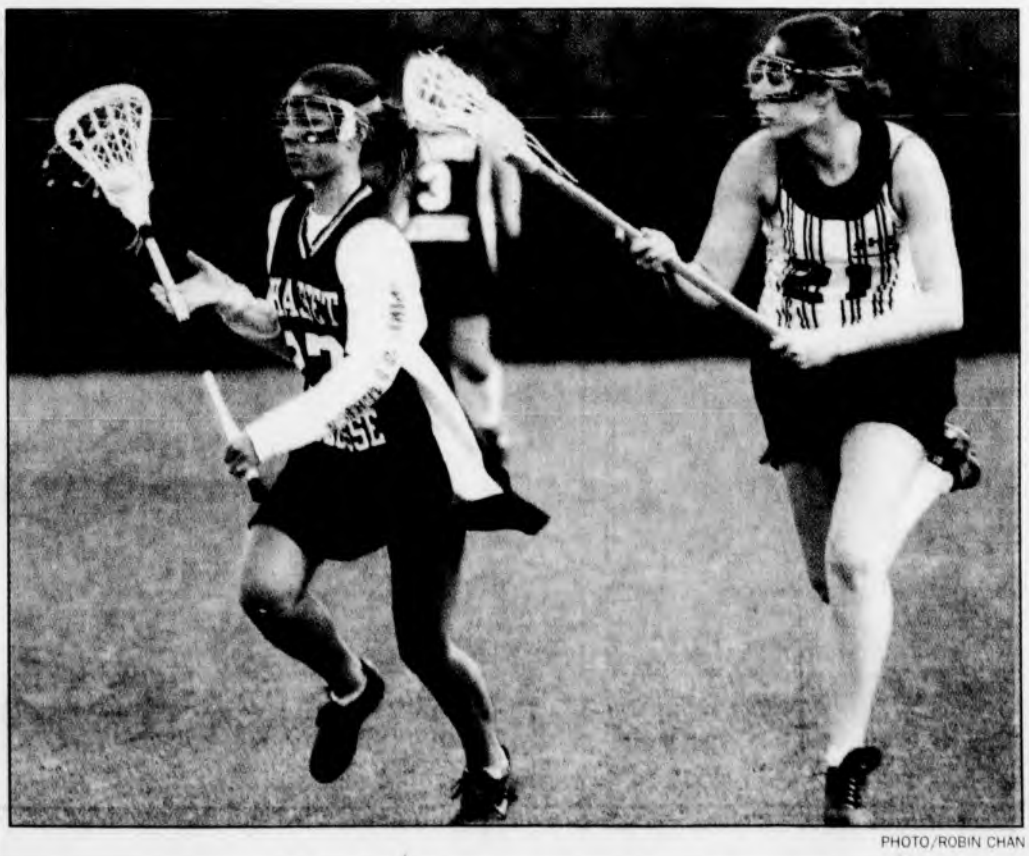
I took in a Cape Cod League baseball game recently: Wareham hosting Yarmouth-Dennis.



I simply cannot believe they're charging nothing for these games which are, essentially, college all-star games.

I'd rate the level of baseball played here somewhere between what I've seen in Pawtucket (Pawsox) and Brockton (Rox).

I was pleasantly surprised on this night to catch up with two local players I'd seen play at the school level. Weymouth's Frank Curreri was playing left field for Y-D and Middleboro's Thomas Thornton was Wareham's starter on the mound.

Thornton, who graduated from Middleboro High in 2002, was one half of the equation in the best pitched high school game I've ever seen. Scituate's Jesse Cole, now pitching Div. I college ball at Wofford College (South Carolina) , was the other half. Thortnon's Sachems won that June, 2001 showdown for the South Shore Sr. softball steps up to the plate for a fourth season

The South Shore Senior Softball League, sponsored by the Scituate Council on Aging, opens its fourth season on Sunday, April 25. The team, open to all South Shore men aged 55 and older, meets at 10 am at the Central Park Field in Scituate.

Proving that age is no barrier to fun and athleticism, the "boys of summer" play up to three times a week in the league. Games are scheduled Sunday and Wednesday mornings at 10 am and Thursday evenings at 5 pm. There is also a traveling team available for interested players to compete in games across the state. Players can play once or three times a week, as they wish. The season runs well into the fall.

Kevin McLaughlin joins league founder Jim Hyde as league commissioner this year. Anyone interested in joining the league can call the Scituate Council on Aging at 781-545-8722 to obtain a registration form. Cost for the season is $30, which covers a shirt, hat and as much softball as one wants to play.

Morgan.

The visitors answered back in their ensuing at bat, however, tying the game at 2-2 with a well executed double steal from first and third.

The game winner came in the home half of that frame. Kenny Muir walked, moved to third on a single by Adam Berger and then scored when Tommy Chase's two out infield grounder was misplayed. Attempting to score from second on the play, Berger was gunned down at the plate for the third out.

Morgan shut the door in the last two innings. He even recorded the last out of the game, as he charged to cover first when a ground ball took Muir deep into the hole. This was the third 3-1 putout this duo performed in the contest.

Cohasset also won the Suburban League regular season championship, compiling an 11-3 record. Two of those losses came to Cedar Grove in an early season weekend doubleheader, so Sunday's game had a little extra significance for the local lads.

"Yeah, it was nice to get the last laugh," noted DeGiacomo.

After getting a first round bye, Cohasset topped Hingham in a quarterfinals thriller, 6-5, with Pat Doonan, John Sturino and DeGiacomo combining efforts on the mound.

Cohasset went into its final at bat trailing, 5-4. Morgan and Kyle Pinkus opened the frame with back-to-back singles and DeGiacomo was hit by a pitch to load the bases. Ian Cundell then lined a single to score both the tying and winning runs.

In the semifinals, Cohasset exploded for eight runs in the first inning versus Weymouth, but then watched the visitors chip away at that over the next several innings before finally pulling out the 11-7 win that advanced them on to the championship date with Cedar Grove.

The team was led offensively this summer by Morgan, DeGiacoma and Cundell, though coach DeGiacomo pointed out his team featured a "pretty balanced attack."

The core of this 14-player team was the 10 14-year olds: Sam DeGiacomo, Chris Rose, Cliff Musto, Ian Cundell, Tom Chase, Cody Morgan, Pat Doonan, Ken Muir, Kyle Pinkus and Dave Snowdale, who missed the end of the season after undergoing elbow surgery. The team also carried four 13 year olds-- Evan Richardson, John Sturino, Adam Berger and Danny Martin—who also contributed, according to the coach.

"This really was a full team effort," said DeGiacomo. "Everyone hit and everyone contributed in different ways. I'm proud of the kids."

On that front, he is hardly alone.

One more than casually interested party in the summer's proceedings was Cohasset High head baseball coach Al Gallotta. He actually coached this core group of players in summer play last year, but could not this year due to MIAA restrictions, as many of these players will be ninth graders at CHS this fall.

The CHS head man still made time, though, to come and watch them play a few times, and he came away extremely pleased.

"I'm thrilled that this team won the championship," said Gallotta, who took over the CHS program two yeard ago after retiring as athletic director at Archbishop Williams in 2001. "That's a very good group of kids there. I like their whole attitude. They're very coachable and respectful. They listen and then go out in the field and try to utilize suggestions.

"And I like the job Mark did with them. He's a gentlemAn and he teaches. He helps them with their skills and is a role model to them at the same time."

When he took over the CHS program two years ago, Gallotta, who lives in Braintree, pledged to become a regular around the town Little League and Senior League fields, and he's more than made good on that promise.

"I think that's part of the job," he explained. "I want the kids to see that I have interest in them and their baseball development. Maybe that will help them stick with the sport. That's why I go to the Little League parade in April and try to make as many games as my schedule allows.

"We've had a lot of kids going toward lacrosse in recent years, but I'm starting to see signs that this might be reversing a bit."

That is plainly evident, he notes, with this group of 14-year old players.

"This is the first class I've seen in my team here with really appreciable numbers," noted Gallotta. "This might be the first group that really forces some tough decision about who plays varsity. I can see a crunch coming, and some difficult decision, but that's a problem I welcome as a baseball coach. That's a problem coaches of successful programs face all the time."

Junior Adam Haracz attained an extremely solid time of 2:12 minutes for the 800 event.

Freshmen Brent Daley also showed some pep in his step with time of 25.3 seconds in the 200, 11.6 seconds in the 100, and a length of 33-feet-6-inches in the triple jump.

In other field events, the Skippers displayed some great arm strength in senior Drew Musto and sophomore Mark Bouchard. Drew unleashed the discus 100'8". He also heaved the shot put just under 37 feet. Bouchard launched the javelin for an eye- popping 116 feet.

"A lot of the boys pulled through this year," stated Lisa Mullen. "Though they didn't make it to the States, they have shown tremendous improvement over the season."

In the end, however, we limited ourselves to a team of just nine individuals and two relay teams, and, after consulting with area coaches, we do feel secure that we chose the top male track athletes in Marinerland for this honor:

in the 200-meters, 800-meters, and 100-meter hurdles, in addition to the shot put, long jump, high jump and javelin. I tried it all and discovered I had a knack for the jav.

Since picking up the jav my sophomore year (one spring after watching Joyner-Kersee win her second-straight gold in the heptathlon in the 1992 Games), I went unbeaten in the Catholic Central League and won three-straight CCL titles in the event. I finished third at the State Class D Meet and went on to the All-State Championships during each of the three years I threw the implement.

I couldn't wait to watch her again in the 1996 Games, which were to be most-likely her last, as I prepared to enter my second year as a collegiate athlete at Sacred Heart University. Again competing in the heptathlon, a tearful Joyner-Kersee was forced to remove herself from the competition due to a sore hamstring. She still competed hurt in the long jump and managed to win a bronze medal on what would be the final jump of her Olympic career. She retired two years later.

This is exactly the type of drama I live for when watching the Olympics. I mean, what an end to her story. Here's a woman who has been revered by many as the greatest heptathlete to ever walk the earth — setting a world record at 1988 Olympic trials with 7, 200-plus points — and she did it all after escaping the mean streets of East St. Louis, Ill., losing her mother at 37 to meningitis, battling severe asthma attacks, and competing injured.

That same year (1996), American sprinter Gail Devers — the favorite to win the 100-meter hurdles — held the lead but tripped over the final hurdle and crawled to the finish line. Only four years earlier did she discover she had Graves disease and was told by doctors that her feet would surely need to be amputated. But that didn't happen and Devers instead went on to win consecutive golds in the 100-meters in 1992 and 1996. Her story will continue this summer in Athens, as just last month Devers earned a trip to Games to go for the hurdling gold medal that has eluded her.

And who could forget the image of four-foot-nothing American gymnast Keri Strug being carried out by legendary coach Bella Carolli to accept the gold medal she clinched for the 1996 US women's team when she landed her final vault perfectly on a bad ankle?

How about the 2000 Games when then 22-year-old Laura Wilkinson beat out the always favorite Japanese divers to win a surprise gold medal in the 10-meter platform? She was the first American to win the event since 1964.

See what I mean about the stories? Uh, I need a Kleenex.

Patriot League championship, 1-0.

Thornton, who was listed at 6-foot-3 and 175 pounds in his final year at MHS, will enter his junior year at Notre Dame University this fall and looked all of his listed 6-4/225 when I saw him the other night.

Looks like nature and Nautilus have combined to create a legitimate Major League prospect. Thornton threw hard and pitched well, giving up five runs on seven hits through seven plus innings, but three of the runs came in on bleeders through the infield.

As for Curreri, he had a big RBI single and made a catch in deep left that would have made Jim Edmonds proud. With two on and two outs, he went back hard to the wall and made a diving catch fully outstretched with his back turned to infield. Not bad for a guy who is used primarily as a catcher at UMass-Amherst.

Curreri is having quite a summer. He's batting a team best .330 (32-for-97) and was recently named MVP of the Cape Cod League all-star game, his two run first inning home run giving the East Division team all the momentum it would need in a 13-0 victory at Eldredge Park, Orleans.

Speaking of local prospects making good, Jason Connelly, the other half of that incredible one-two Scituate High pitching punch from the 2001 and 2002 seasons, had a banner year at Western New England and is currently lighting it up for the Mills City All-Americans in a very strong New England College Baseball League.

Connelly, who will enter his junior year at Western New England College this fall, has been converted by the All-Americans from a starter to a closer this summer. Through 14 appearances and 20.1 innings of work, Connelly has posted an ERA of 3.10 that places him 10th in the entire NECBL and he's recorded three saves.

This past season for Western New England College, Connelly, the MVP of the Patriot League in 2002, posted a 9-3 record and 2.76 ERA in 97.2 innings in gaining the Cy Young Award for WNEC. The nine victories tied as the second highest in school history. Connelly also had nine complete games and one shutout while hitting .277 in 44 games.

Connelly was named both the GNAC Pitcher-of-the-Year and GNAC Tournament MVP. He was named to the All-GNAC First Team, GNAC Tournament Team, and NCAA Division III New England Regional Tournament Team.

WNEC finished the season with a 33-14 record that was a school record for wins, breaking the old mark of 29 set in 2002. The Golden Bears also placed third at the NCAA Division III New England Regional Tournament and captured their second Great Northeast Athletic Conference (GNAC) Tournament title in four years.

Incidentally, Jason's brother Chris was named Mariner All-Scholastic this week for lacrosse.

Chris decided after his sophomore year not to follow in his big brother's footsteps, and boy did that work out.

Chris had a couple of friends playing lacrosse, so he made the jump from baseball to lacrosse in the spring of 2003. A little more than a year later, he's headed for Bucknell University and appears to have a good shot of playing lacrosse at the Div. 1 college level.

The sudden retirement of Ricky Williams, 27, from the NFL this weekend came as a shock to many. It probably shouldn't have.

No one who receives a paycheck playing professional sports takes a beating, either physical and mental, that comes even close to comparing to what is endured by today's "all purpose backs," such as Ricky.

And no one from this select group took near as many hits as Ricky has over the last two years.

Williams made his money, and now he's chosen to walk away rather than limp, or worse, away.

How can anyone criticize him for that?

Of course, as a diehard member of Patriots nation, my perception may be slightly skewed.

Must we assign blame?

Why, rather than looking back at this time on the highlights of Nomar's largely glorious seven plus seasons in a Red Sox uniform, must we rather let fly with the muck and obsess over conspiracy theories?

Duh! Because we're Red Sox fans. That's what we do. If it bothers you, get over it. Better yet, why don't you start checking out real estate and the job market in the midwest.

For the last week in these parts it's been all Nomar all the time…on the radio, in print, in cyberspace and every where in the vicinity of water coolers and coffee machines, and still, seemingly, we can't get enough…and by "we," of course I mean me.

What this entire mess really boils down to, of course, is that Nomar was royally PO'd with Sox ownership, management, and, to a lesser extent, the local media. The first question, then, is should he have been?

And that is the $64 million question, or rather the $60 million question with some "minimal" deferment.

There's no way we'll ever get a healthy consensus on that query. The information we're getting is, to no surprise, wildly contradictory. And that, to a large extent, is what helps make this all great fodder for the ongoing debates.

Here's the way I look at it.

Sox management/ownership set this whole acrimonious situation into motion by not closing on the ARod deal when they had the chance. The difference between finalizing the deal or deals was something like $14 million, not exactly chump change, even by Major League Baseball standards, but it would have been a relatively small price to pay compared to what turned out to be the end game of this mess.

And Sox management should have foreseen what shook down as a very real possibility before they walked away from the table with their Rangers counterparts for the final time.

Even casual fans of this team knew that Nomar was an overly sensitive control freak. How did we expect him to feel when he was suddenly made to feel both unloved and out of control? That's right: pretty much the way he did.

A big part of the responsibility for Theo Epstein, Larry Lucchino, et al, as team managers is to manage around the personalities of the players. That's something fans seldom like to dwell on, but it is a fact of life. They screwed up. Plain and simple.

This is not to say I'm excusing Nomar for his failings. Hey, if a Little Leaguer acted the way he has in many cases, we'd call him a petulant brat. Why should Nomar be spared the same designation? Because he happens to be one of the most talented ballplayers on the planet?

How do you defend a guy who acts all insulted after being repeatedly offered $60 million over four years…in this marketplace…given his recent history…to stay in a place he proclaimed to love? A show of hands now: who out there wouldn't welcome that kind of insult?

Virtually everything that has been reported since that final offer of $60 million has been spin.

And it looks like that big wheel is just gonna keep turning for a while longer.

A new place for Old Glory

Beechwood park flagpole installed

Beechwood was the only recreational facility in town without a flagpole.

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

There are few things more American than singing the National Anthem at a ball game. Whether it be Little Leaguers or women's softball players, when the anthem is played and every eye turns to the flag, every hat is lowered to cover the heart.

But until recently, players at the Beechwood Ball Park didn't have a proper flagpole to display the red, white, and blue. In fact, Beechwood was the only recreational facility in town without a flagpole. However, thanks to the efforts of 66 individuals, families, and organizations from Cohasset, the flag can now waive proudly from a brand new pole.

Glenn Pratt, who has been working to help spruce up the Beechwood Cemetery area, said the idea to begin a Beechwood Ball Park flagpole project was conceived by Leo LeClair as well as other longtime Beechwood residents Merle Brown, Nancy Snowdale, Fay Sargent, and Sherwood and Cora Ainslie. Because the Beechwood Ball Park had not had a flagpole since the closing of the Beechwood Firehouse more than 25 years ago, they thought it was time to bring a pole back.

"Due to the tremendous response and generosity of Beechwood neighbors and other Cohasset citizens," a flagpole was recently installed at Beechwood Corner, said Pratt. Nearly $5,000 was donated to be put toward the cause. In the coming weeks, Mass Electric will install special lighting which will shine up on the flag to highlight it for all to see.

The town has been working hard to restore the Beechwood Cemetery area. Last year, Pratt worked with the Cemetery Study Committee to restore two sets of intricate wrought iron gates at the Beechwood Cemetery. In addition, new signage was created to resemble what a sign might have looked like in the 1870s when the gates were originally crafted. Recently, Pratt said a group led by Nancy Snowdale landscaped portions of the corner of the cemetery.

Funding for the gates and signs was provided by the Community Preservation Committee, which allocated $20,000 to cover expenses associated with both. Nothing had been done in terms of aesthetic improvements at the cemetery since the 1970s.

In 2001, 300 new plots were added to the cemetery. Other expansions over the years include one in the early 1900s when the property was squared off, and another in the 1990s when an additional section off Beechwood Street was cleared.

Donations are still being accepted to enable further improvements to be made to the Beechwood Ball Park. Those interested in making a donation can make checks out to the Beechwood Ball Park Flagpole Project. Checks can be sent to Glenn Pratt's home address at 482 King St.

Historic NE photos on exhibit

The Hull Lifesaving Museum and the Society for the Preservation of New England Antiquities is hosting "The Camera's Coast" a sampler of historic coastal New England images from the collections of Society for the Preservation of New England Antiquities through Sept. 5. The pioneering photographers represented from SPNEA include Nathaniel Stebbins, Henry G. Peabody, Baldwin Coolidge, and Emma Coleman. Subjects depicted include square-riggers, coasting schooners, fishing vessels and fishing ports, small boats and large yachts, summer hotels and fishermen's shacks, fishermen, seaweed gatherers, and salt-marsh haymakers.

Curated by noted author and maritime historian William H. Bunting, "The Camera's Coast" illustrates life along the New England coast in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. These were years of great social and economic change. Many traditional maritime occupations, from long-shore fishing and shipbuilding to deep water voyaging were in decline. With mushrooming industrialism and growing numbers of people able to take vacations – and increasingly hot, crowded, and dirty cities from which to flee – coastal recreation boomed.

GETTING ON YOUR GOOD SIDE

People usually put a phone receiver to the ear that is on the same side as their dominant hand; however, this may be a problem for left-handed people who talk on the phone in noisy environments. The reason is that you are apt to hear specific words better if you put the receiver to your right ear. The fact is that your right ear is wired more directly to the part of the brain that processes language. This is somewhat ironic, in that the left part of the brain is mostly responsible for this processing task. According to tests, if two words are broadcast to someone who is wearing earphones, the word coming from the right will be better understood.

Our primary mission at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER is to help as many people as possible enhance their hearing. We hope to help the hearing impaired better enjoy the world through education, advanced technology, and friendly, compassionate service. For a knowledgeable understanding of how the body's hearing mechanism works, and a deep commitment to knowing what is available today to maximize each individual's hearing ability, we welcome you to 534 Main Street (Rt. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth. Phone: 781-337-1144. We accept most HMOs, State GIC, Union Benefits, and Mass Health.

P.S. A hearing test produces an audiogram, which is a printout of a person's hearing file that shows what he or she can or cannot hear.

Statue story is still a mystery

Internet sites attract teens

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

A garden statue that is a local landmark and may have stood looking out over Straits Pond for as long as 80 years is home again.

However, the recent theft of the flower girl that looks like Alice of "Alice in Wonderland," the 1865 children's book by Lewis Carroll, is just the latest chapter in the mystery surrounding the 4-1/2-foot tall structure.

The story that the statue represents a little girl, who fell off a cliff and drowned in the pond, has made it to the Internet, and no doubt contributes to the carloads of teenagers who drive slowly by her at night; some stopping to get out and have a closer look, much to the dismay of the homeowners.

"Haunted sites" on the Internet state the statue can be seen moving toward the water on summer nights but as soon as you approach her or talk to her she disappears but then the statue is right back where started.

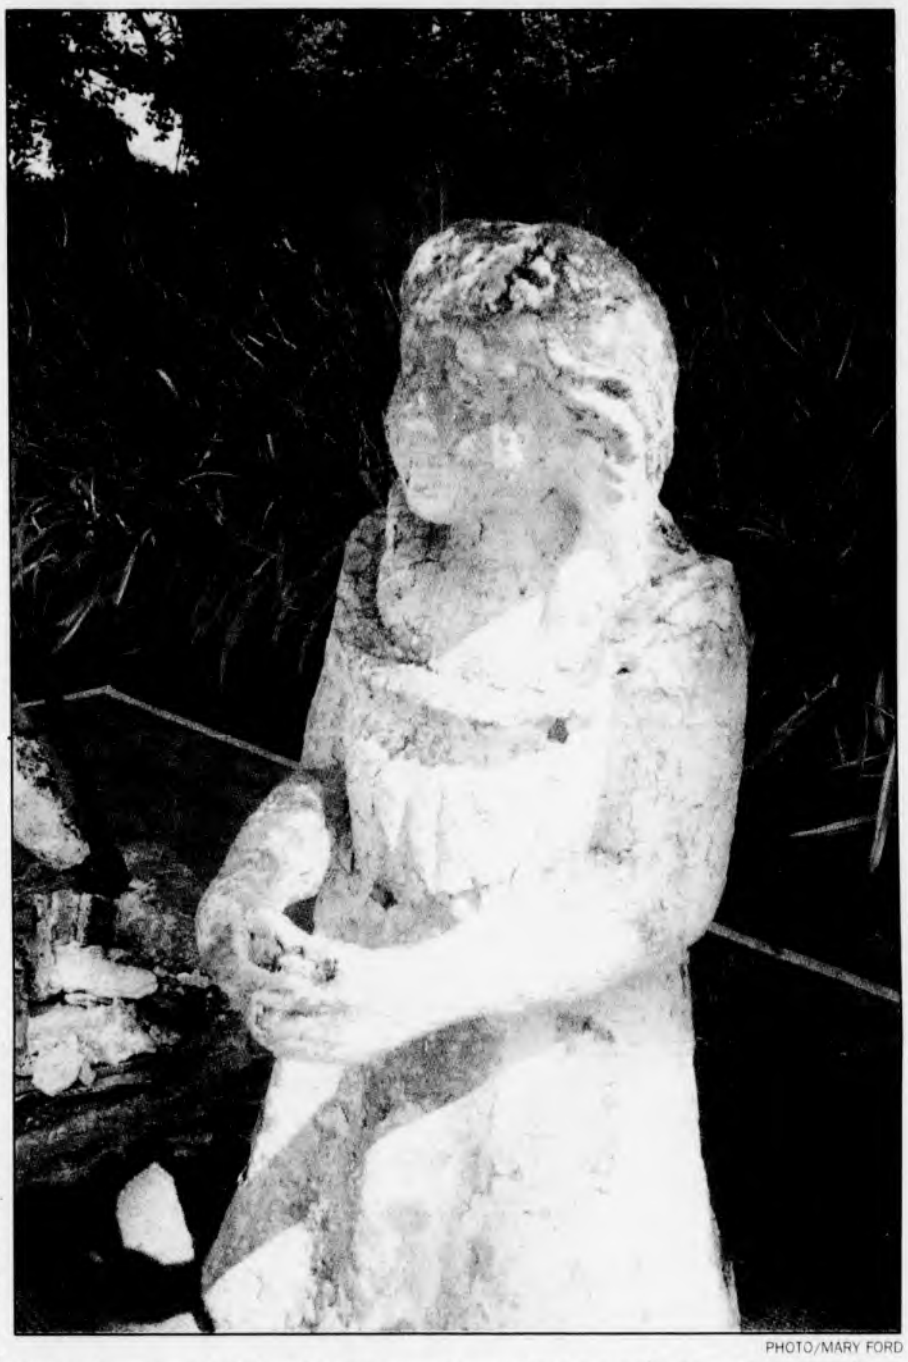
"Amy" wrote in January on one Web site – "It's so creepy."

It may have been kids enamored by ghost tales that dragged the statue off late one night two weeks ago. The statue, which weighs roughly 300-400 pounds, broke in two. In their haste, the thieves left the legs and base behind.

Thanks to thorough police work, the top half of statue turned up in Weymouth a few days later and was returned to homeowners, David and Claire Cardelle of 739 Jerusalem Road. The theft is still under investigation.

"The statue has always attracted teenagers and curious people," David says. "For the eight years we've lived here, we've witnessed cars pulling up along side of the road along our property, shining headlights on the statue to try and see it moving.

"Over the past two years, and this year especially, the volume of cars coming to the property has escalated – I attribute this in part to the posting of the rumor on various Web sites."



For as long as anyone can remember, the statue has stood on the lawn near the fountain of the former "party house or boat house" of the old Pope Estate, which was subdivided years ago.

Col. Albert A. Pope and his wife, Abbie Lindner Pope, were summer residents in the late 1800s and early 1900s. Their home is now the Howe Estate Condominium. Col. Pope was a wealthy bicycle manufacturer and made the original Columbia bicycle, which had a big front wheel and small rear one, according to the "Narrative History of Cohasset," volumes I & II.

There was a real tragedy in Straits Pond, but it wasn't the drowning of a little girl. The Popes, whose son, Charles, drowned in Straits Pond in 1898, at 16-1/2, built the Pope Memorial Church (now the Greek Church) in his memory.

The little girl statue now sits behind the Cardelles' home in Beach dunes cause a fuss

DEP unhappy with Cohasset

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

An environmental analyst for the state Department of Environmental Protection has threatened enforcement action against Cohasset for removing a sand dune from the parking lot at Sandy Beach and aggressively pushing the sand onto the beach with construction equipment.

Elizabeth Sabounjian, an environmental analyst for DEP's Wetland and Waterways Program, told town officials at a meeting last week that she expected the town to come up with a plan to replace the dune or face the "hammer" of DEP penalties. Sabounjian added that she would prefer a cooperative response from the town rather than an enforcement action by the state.

"My enforcement hammer will remain small as long as I get full cooperation," Sabounjian said. "My enforcement hat is the only way I can make sure that this doesn't happen again."

Sabounjian met last week at the Sandy Beach parking lot with Jason D. Burtner, South Shore Regional Coordinator of the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs Office of Coastal Zone Management

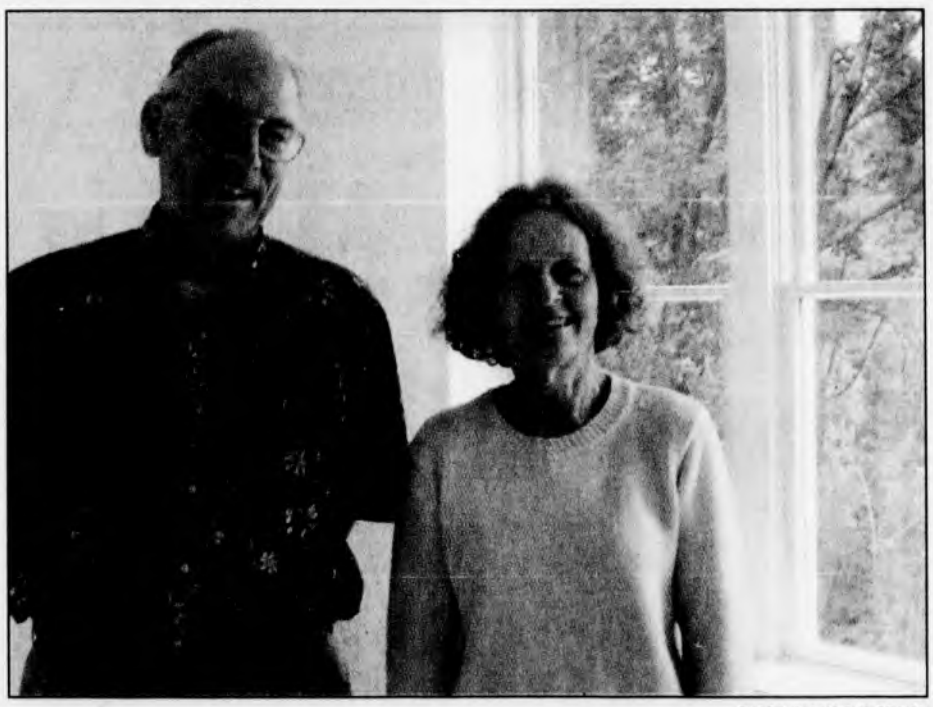
Pratt apartments put out welcome mat



Open house is on Sunday

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Cohasset will be able to make a small increase in its total affordable housing stock very soon, as two new apartments, located in the rear of the Paul Pratt Memorial Building, are almost ready to open their doors. New coats of paint are drying, appliances are being installed, and both will be finished and ready for prospective tenants by Sept. 1.

Tom Gruber of the Cohasset Historical Society, which is also housed in the Pratt building, has been working with fellow society member Werner Diekman, to ensure the project comes to fruition. "It has completely consumed us for the last three months," Gruber said.

This Sunday, Aug. 22, residents will be able to take their first look at the apartments as the historical society will be hosting a catered open house reception where the public will be invited to tour the apartments from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. While visiting the apartments, the historical society will also invite guests to take a tour of its latest exhibit, which coincides with the publication of its latest book (see related story, page 13).

Voters at the 2003 Annual Town Meeting approved a total of $300,000 in Community Preservation Committee fund transfers, which allowed the historical society to get the apartment project underway. The funds were given with the condition that the apartments would be exclusively rented to tenants of at least age 55 who meet state

Voter registration

Any citizen of the United States who is a Massachusetts resident and who will be 18 years old on or before a town meeting or Election Day may register to vote. There is no waiting period to be eligible to register to vote. If you move, you may register to vote as soon as you move into your new home.

Registration is closed for a brief period before each town meeting and election to allow election officials time to prepare the voting lists. If you register during a "closed" period you will be eligible to vote only in later town meetings or elections.

Federal law now requires that you provide your driver's license number to register to vote. If you do not have a current Massachusetts driver's license, you must provide the last four digits of your social security number. This information will be verified through the Registry of Motor Vehicles and the commissioner of Social Security. If the information cannot be verified or you do not provide this information, you must provide identification either with the application or at the polls where you go to vote.

The last day to register to vote or to change party enrollment for the State Primary is Wednesday, Aug. 25, from 8:30 a.m. to 8 p.m. at the Town Clerk's office. Mail-in registration forms are available from the Town Clerk's office, Cohasset Post Office and Paul Pratt Memorial Library and must be postmarked on or before Aug. 25.

Greenbush work may only be weeks away

Tom Carroll, Community Outreach Director for Cashman Balfour Beatty, which is working on the Greenbush line construction, said the MBTA is preparing to begin work on a culvert at Sanctuary Pond. While he said that project is at least a couple of weeks away, a firm date has not been set. Work will also begin in the municipal parking lot sometime in early September. Carroll will provide updates as the dates draw near. In addition, Carroll said he will be mailing copies of Frequently Asked Questions to abutters of the project and will also drop copies of the FAQs at Town Hall. Answers to FAQs can also be accessed on the Cashman Web site at www.cbb-greenbush.com as well as the MBTA Web site at www.mbta.com.

Volunteers sought for Facilities Committee

The town of Cohasset is looking for dedicated volunteers to serve on its School Building and Facilities Committee. Given the major construction projects the town has recently completed, including the school buildings and other renovations to town buildings, the committee is in a transition phase which will bring it from overseeing construction to overseeing maintenance and planning for the future of the town's buildings. The committee therefore needs residents with experience in the field to assist in the process.

Those interested in serving should forward a letter of interest to Town Manager Michael Buckley at Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave. For more information please call the Town Manager in the Selectmen's office at (781) 383-4105.

Sewer Comm. floats additional sewer votes

Sewer Commission Chairman Raymond Kasperowicz said while it had been thought the town would vote on a proposed Home Rule Petition at Town Meeting, voters may have the option to vote by ballot as well. Because Town Meeting is often stuffed with either pro- or opponents, Kasperowicz said it has been mentioned to him that votes at Town Meeting might not necessarily reflect the town's opinion as a whole. The Home Rule Petition would be a bylaw change, and all that is required to enact it is a Town Meeting vote. Sewer Commissioner John Beck questioned whether the town could "Get tangled up in our legal underwear," by adding another step to the process. Kasperowicz said the commission would have to talk to Town Counsel to see what the options would be and whether some kind of a town-wide vote should be enacted.

If passed, the Home Rule Petition would amend the Cohasset Sewer Act to allow the commission to expand the sewer district, to encompass areas that would not otherwise be allowed to tie-in. The bylaw is very similar to a Home Rule Petition adopted by Provincetown, and allows for "checker-boarding" of sewer districts in areas where the sewer commission deems it is necessary.

Kudos to Dick Nye

The Center for Student Coastal Research commended Richard Nye, chief operator for the Cohasset Wastewater Treatment Plant, for the help and support he has extended to students participating in the program. In a letter to Nye, CSCR president and Cohasset High School teacher Jack Buckley said "For the past two summers, students involved in our research projects (in collaboration with Cohasset High School) have benefited from your willingness to share information, provide technical advice, and teach students as questions and needs arise."

"Most recently, you've been instrumental in helping us initiate monitoring of total suspended solids…you have toured our facility to offer technical advice, informally trained students and staff in your lab, procured supplies needed for TSS testing, and then went above and beyond the call of duty by securing for us the appropriate oven needed for this procedure. It is not an exaggeration to say that without your interest in our work and without your support, we would not be able to provide this opportunity to our students at this time."

Buckley went on to commend Nye for his past 10 years serving as a community resource, especially for environmental education. "It is my hope that this letter serves to inform colleagues and municipal leaders that you are actively, though quietly, reaching out to the community in ways that are deeply appreciated by the CSCP and by the students and staff at Cohasset High School."

Rain can't dampen ceremony for four local land acquisitions

Herzfelder heralds state $800K grant

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

When environmentalists get together — you can be sure of at least one thing, a little rain isn't going to bother them.

That was abundantly clear last Friday when a hearty group of about 40 people — from Hull, Hingham and Cohasset – gathered under umbrellas and in a small tent by the Weir River for a collective pat-on-the-back.

State Environmental Secretary Ellen Roy Herzfelder, a Cohasset resident, has first-hand knowledge of the benefits of open space preservation on the South Shore.

So it came as no surprise that Herzfelder made a personal visit despite the inclement weather to herald the acquisition of four Hull-Hingham land acquisitions that will help protect the Weir River Estuary. The acquisitions are being made possible through a $800,000 state grant and lots of volunteer hours by myriad non-profit organizations working together to preserve the natural landscape.

"This is home to more than 100 bird species and fish and shellfish that need to be protected," Herzfelder said. "The state is excited to be a partner with you in this."

"The state is excited to be a partner with you in this."
— Ellen Roy Herzfelder, Secretary of Environmental Affairs

The four newly protected properties include:

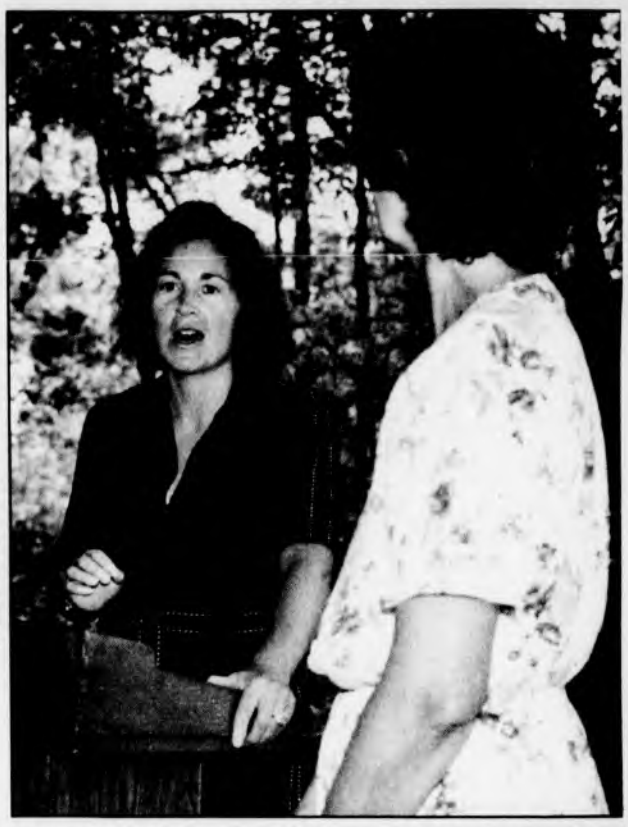
- 1/2 acre in Hingham on George Washington Boulevard near the mouth of the estuary. The former gas station site will be cleaned up and donated to the Town of Hingham;
- two small parcels in Hull, one that abuts the Weir River Estuary Park and is centrally located within a growing network of conservation land, and the other includes a rocky summit near the highest point in the estuary;
- four acres in Hull which is one of the last remaining privately held yet undeveloped parcels along the shores of Boston Harbor. Preserving this land will protect a variety of natural resources while preserving views.

The land acquisitions took root in 2003 when representatives from Hingham, Hull and Cohasset prepared a report, dubbed "Building a Vision for Our Weir River Estuary," that identified unprotected lands around the Weir River Area of Critical Environmental Concern, with follow-up strategy sessions about how to protect the land.

The Weir River Estuary encompasses 509 acres in Hull, 385 acres in Hingham and 25 acres in Cohasset. Within the estuary there are 922 acres of open water and diverse wetlands habitat. According to the report, mollusks, crustaceans, salt marsh grasses and aquatic vegetation found in the area provide a constant food source for more than 100 resident and migratory birds. Clam flats in the estuary provide 17 percent of the total clams harvested within Boston Harbor.

"Minimizing the types of development that generate harmful pollutants and greatly alter the landscape is vital to habitat protection efforts," the report states.

ACECs are afforded additional attention and protection from state agencies.



In addition to town officials from the three communities, other groups that participated in setting the stage for the land acquisitions include, the Trust for Public Land, Weir River Estuary Park Committee, Cohasset Land Conservation Trust, Hingham Land Trust, Wildlands Trust of Plymouth County, Coastal Zone Management, Department of Conservation and Recreation, Department of Environmental Protection, Trustees of Reservations, Jake's Seafood Restaurant, Straits Pond Watershed Association, Surfriders Foundation, and Weir River Watershed Association.

Herzfelder said the Romney administration is committed to preserving open space. She explained last year with an $18 million budget, the state protected $70 million worth of land. This year's budget has $27 million for land protection, she said.

Stolen statue found in Weymouth

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

There aren't many antique, life-size garden statues that look like Alice of "Alice in Wonderland" around.

"It is so unique that it was recovered after we put out a computer message to other cities and towns," said Officer Lisa Matos. " Five minutes later we got a call from the Weymouth Police Department that they had found a statue and were interested to see if it could be the same one."

"It is so unique that it was recovered after we put out a computer message to other cities and towns."
— Officer Lisa Matos

ARTHUR RACKMAN, CA. 1907

An early illustration of Alice of "Alice in Wonderland."

The statue of a little girl was stolen from the front yard at 739 Jerusalem Road sometime overnight from Tuesday, Aug. 3 to Wednesday, Aug. 4. The thieves knocked over the statue and attempted to drag it off. In the process, it broke apart and what was left were the knees and below, including the base – everything else was taken.

The statue, which is a local landmark, has much sentimental value to people in town. However, it's become an object of fascination to many area teenagers because of stories posted on the Internet that the statue is haunted.

The night after the statue was stolen – more young people drove to the Straits Pond home. It's not clear if they came to see the statue, not knowing it was gone, or were there to retrieve the legs.

The homeowner, who was able to describe the vehicles, yelled at them and they drove off. Police, who were patrolling the area, then stopped two vehicles and obtained the occupants identities. No one has been charged and the matter is still under investigation.

Luckily, the statue was discarded in a random yard in Weymouth. The residents there called police and provided a description.

"Weymouth police saw the computer broadcast and said 'wait a second' we picked up a statue that could be a match,'" Matos said.

Statue story is still a mystery

two pieces. The framework of the body and legs is wood surrounded by a wire mesh that is covered with a hard material, possibly concrete and a thin outer crust. The legs were secured to the body with long, steel rods. The base is made of stone and cement.

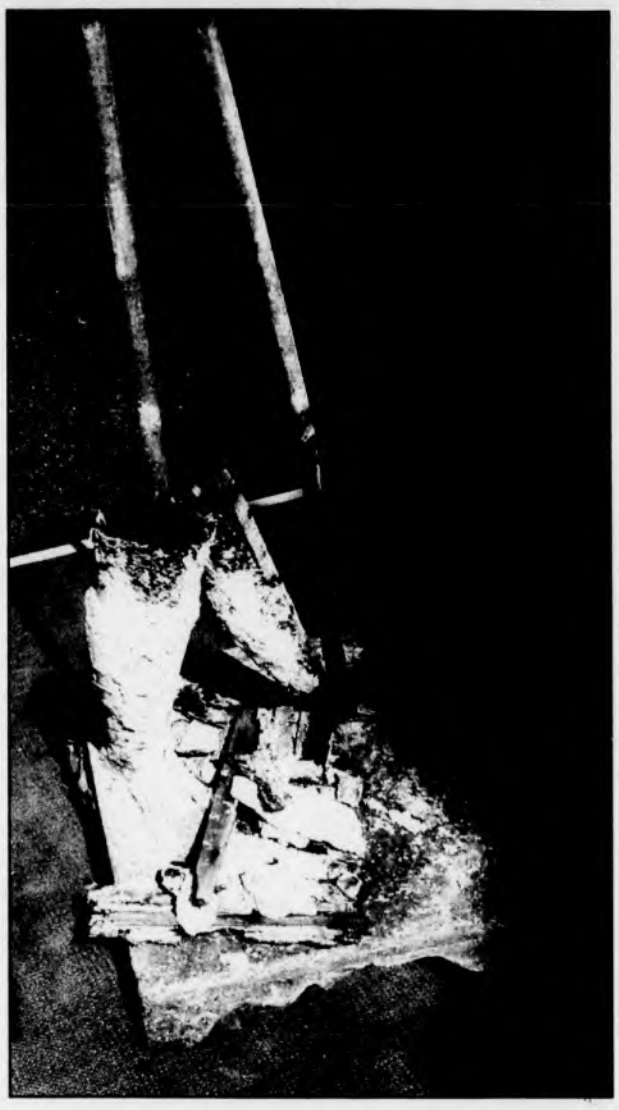
According to Karen Fix of Brooklyn-based Conservation Artisans, the statue could easily be 80 or more years old. She explained that "Alice in Wonderland" and other garden statues were very fashionable at the time. In the late 1800s and early 1900s, statues were also very detailed.

The "flower girl" Cohasset statue is quite detailed including her hair that is in ringlets down her shoulders and back. She is barefoot and wearing a ruffled dress that comes to her knees. Her hands meet in the front, with her thumbs and fingers on each hand making a circle, perhaps to hold bouquets of flowers.

The Cardelles said they are looking into having the statue appraised and restored but have not decided if they will put it back where it stood for so many years.

Although it will be sad not to put her back out, she may be too much of an attraction. David said vandals have pushed her over on several occasions and smashed old planters near the statue and fountain – the most recent incident was the final straw.

"We have received dozens of phone calls from concerned and upset townspeople who are heartbroken over the theft and vandalism of the historic statue," he said. "While there is controversy over the true story of the girl and the statue, it has great sentimental value to many residents in town."



It also has sentimental value to the Cardelles, who put an American flag in the statue's hands following 9-11.

Despite the ghost stories, David said in the nearly eight years his family has lived in the house – the statue has never moved of its own accord.

"The only time it's moved is when someone has tried to move it," he said.

The little girl statue isn't the only thing in Cohasset getting ghostly attention on the Internet. According to the Shadowlands Haunted Places Index, there are scary goings on at Cohasset Town Hall.

"In the cells in the basement, people have heard groans and chains," it states. "Some poltergeist activity. There are also cold spots."

DEP says dune destruction is a 'no-no'

(CZA); Mark Borrelli, Coastal Geologist for the CZA; acting Town Manager Michael Buckley; Robin Lawrence, president of the Sandy Beach Association; and Dr. Peter S. Rosen, also of the Sandy Beach Association.

Sabounjian directed town officials to prepare a dune restoration project and a site plan. She also directed officials from the town and the Sandy Beach Association to prepare a site plan for restoring a dune that abutted the seawall at the beach and maintaining it in conformance with environmental regulations. Sabounjian wants vegetation planted along the sea wall to protect the beach from erosion. The dune abutting the seawall was damaged by the construction equipment that pushed sand from the parking lot onto the beach.

"The beach is a little more complicated than the dune in the parking lot," Sabounjian said. "Steps must be taken to recreate the frontal dune against the wall and stabilize it. There also needs to be a beach maintenance plan to ensure the stability of the beach."

Town officials and representatives from the Sandy Beach Association will meet with Sabounjian in September to present a plan for the dune restoration and beach, and to work on a detailed consent agreement with specific goals and deadlines.

Sabounjian visited Sandy Beach in response to a resident's complaint over the removal of the sand dune earlier this summer. Sand dunes prevent beach erosion and protect natural features of the land from water and wind erosion.

At one point, Buckley said he didn't understand how the strip of sand that separates the parking lot and the street could be a dune when the town created it in the first place.

"I just have a hard time understanding how this is a sand dune when we pushed the sand here," Buckley said.

Borrelli replied that state laws protect all sand dunes, even ones created artificially or inadvertently.

"Once vegetation takes hold, you have a protected dune, no matter how it was created," Borrelli added.

In June, the town hired a contractor to remove sand dunes that blocked driver visibility at the entrance and exit to the parking lot at Sandy Beach. The dune removal coincided with the town's annual clean-up of the parking lot. Every winter, strong winds and storms blow sand from the beach onto the lot. In the late spring, the town hires a contractor to use heavy construction equipment to push the sand back onto the beach.

The conservation commission approved the dune removal at the entrance and exit to the lot for public safety reasons. Drivers exiting the lot could not clearly see oncoming traffic along the street. Sabounjian said the town exceeded the conservation commission's order of conditions by removing sand from a narrow dune that runs along the entire length of the parking area between the street and the lot.

"The conservation commission issued an order of conditions that allowed the town to remove the dunes at the entrance and exit of the parking lot for public safety reasons, and that was a reasonable thing to permit," Sabounjian said. "But that's not what happened. This was a protected dune before the town removed it. It was protected under the Conservation Act, and the conservation commission recognized that through its order of conditions. The conservation commission issued an order of conditions and the town chose to ignore it. That tells me that the town doesn't listen to its conservation commission."

Late in the meeting, Buckley pointed out that the dune would have to be maintained by the town to protect it from the elements and pedestrians. He also pointed out that the town needed to push the sand back onto Sandy Beach every year to keep the lot accessible to cars. During the discussion, Sabounjian expressed frustration with what she believed was a lack of commitment to a restoration project from the town officials and Sandy Beach Association members at the meeting. She reiterated her belief that the town would have to enter into a consent agreement with the state.

"I understand issues of use and maintenance, and I want to incorporate that into the consent agreement," Sabounjian said. "What I'm still not hearing from you is, 'I'll try.' We'll have to reach a solution. We're here to protect the environment. I'm not here to [use fines to] take tax money from the people that use the beach. A consent agreement with the involvement of the conservation commission will provide more consistent oversight through the life of the project."

Lawrence noted that although the town maintains the parking lot and the street, the Sandy Beach Association receives no money from the town for the beach. Sandy Beach is a registered non-profit site. Any money that the association receives to maintain the beach comes from private donations.

Burtner and Borrelli offered to provide technical assistance through resources available at CZA. Sabounjian also suggested that the town seek assistance from the Boy Scouts of America and other volunteer organizations to help control the cost of the restoration project and site plan.

In an interview after the meeting, Buckley pointed out that many residents had responded positively to the improved traffic views at the Sandy Beach Parking lot. Rosen added that there was no disagreement between the town and the Sandy Beach Association about the goals for the site.

RECYCLING PROGRAM

What a great story to report to our town. Super job to all of these children. As part of its fledgling Recycling Program, the South Shore Art Center Arts Festival held a poster contest this year to give younger artists an opportunity to express their environmentalism.

Funded by a grant from the Mass. Department of Environmental Protection to the South Shore Recycling Cooperative, the Arts Festival committee set up waste stations at this year's Festival that included recycling containers for bottles, cans, paper and cardboard. The program succeeded in reducing the volume of Festival trash by about a third. The poster contest winners' art will be used in next year's recycling promotion for the Arts Festival.

Sean Connolly, center, with his proud parents Betsy and Ed Connolly.

There were 28 inspiring poster entries depicting recycling, conservation and environmental themes. The eight winning posters will be displayed at the 10-day Marshfield Fair, which will also feature its first Recycling Program. The winners will be sent DEP "Recycle: Remake a Difference" T-shirts and several Cohasset residents are on the list.

Congratulations to Natalie Dignam, 11, Giselle Hart, 9, Caroline Kennedy, 7, Jenna Neer, 11 and Alexandra Weissman, 10. "It was encouraging to see the kids' enthusiasm for the Festival recycling program", said Claire Sullivan, executive director of the South Shore Recycling Cooperative. "Their posters were great, and showed that they understand that their small efforts now will make a big difference in their world later. The SSRC and Mass. DEP appreciate the South Shore Art Center's willingness to set up a system to reduce their waste, and we thank all the artists for their thoughtful contributions." The grant will fund a similar recycling program at the Marshfield Fair, Aug. 20-29.

Cohasset News buys Village Butcher & Deli

John Scott and Mike Feroli shake hands before passing papers on Monday. Feroli sold the Village Butcher and Deli to John and his brother, Larry, who own Cohasset News.

Dividing wall to come down

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Usually when change occurs, especially in a popular local eatery – it's noticeable.

But changes to the Village Butcher and Deli on Brook Street may be as transparent as it gets.

Mike Feroli, who has sold the business to his next-door neighbors at Cohasset News, John and Larry Scott, is going to stay on for the time being.

"Everyone's staying," he says about the help. Feroli has owned the business for eight years – and while he likes dealing with the public, the business end of things wasn't high on his list.

"I love the work, it's the responsibility of the business end I didn't like."

— Mike Feroli, village deli

"This is a joyful day for me," Feroli said Monday before passing papers. "I love the work, it's the responsibility of the business end I didn't like – writing the checks and keeping the checkbook."

The deli employs about eight people, most of whom are part-time.

John Scott says the timing is perfect, as he is ready to try something a little different. He plans to eventually open up the wall between the deli and the news store. The deli will be open from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m., Monday through Saturday for the time being. Eventually, Scott wants to open for breakfast and on Sundays.

Future plans also include changing the name to something like the Cohasset Marketplace and Deli where Scott wants to offer some groceries and produce in addition to the newspapers and current merchandise.

"I'm really looking forward to the new business," Scott says. "Change is good and it's time to do something different."

The Scotts, who own the building, have had Cohasset News since 1994, but it has been in the family for years with the exception of a period of time in the late 1980s.

Selectmen last week approved a common victualler (food license) for J & L, Inc. doing business as Cohasset News. Acting Town Manager Michael Buckley explained to selectmen that Cohasset News was taking over the deli, which isn't closing.

Feroli said Monday he plans to work at the deli until the end of the year.

Pratt apartments put out welcome mat

affordable housing income standards. The town is trying to meet a 10 percent affordability threshold set by the state, and the two units will help the town meet that need. Gruber said the historical society wouldn't be exhibiting its collection from the Pratt building today, had the apartments not been feasible.

"Before we even put an offer on the building, we worked with an architect to conceptualize where the apartments would fit and whether it would be feasible to do so," said Gruber, adding because the building is much larger than the historical society's former home in the Lothrop House, society members knew there would be more expenses involved with operating a larger building and needed a way to compensate for those costs. With rents set at roughly $1,500 per month, not only will the apartments help make that possible, they will provide much needed housing for the community, as priority will be given to Cohasset residents, he said.

The two air-conditioned apartments are in the building's lower level. They will each have their own outside entrances at the rear of the building. New walkways are currently being installed that run along the right side of the building toward the back. Gruber said the walkways will have railings and photocell lighting on both sides, which automatically turn on when daylight fades. There will also be photocell lights above both doorways.

The first apartment is in what used to house the children's section of the old library. Walking into the unit, there is an entryway with two closets on the right. The first is a coat closet, and the second houses the heating and air conditioning units.

Large, slightly textured, sand-colored tiles cover the floors in the entryway. Moving through the entryway, the floors change to light colored oak hardwood floors in both the living and dining areas. Gruber said the hardwood floors have a warranty of between 20 and 40 years, because they have such a good finish. "It's done in a factory, so it's much better than you could do yourself," he said.

Tom Gruber and Paula Morse stand in the kitchen of one of the new Pratt building apartments.

The open living area is located to the left of the entryway, and the dining area is to the right. There are exposed brick walls in the living area which have been painted. Every wall throughout both apartments has been painted an eggshell white and the trim is bright white.

There are windows on two of the walls in the living area. An arc of white trim runs along the top of each of the living area windows. There is crown molding and white chair rails throughout the living area.

"Before we even put an offer on the building, we worked with an architect to conceptualize where the apartments would fit and whether it would be feasible to do so."
— Tom Gruber, historical society

To the right of the entryway there is an eating area which is connected to the kitchen. The kitchen has maple cabinets, sand-colored countertops, and white appliances, which includes a new refrigerator, smooth surface stove, microwave, and dishwasher, as well as a stainless steel sink and overhead lights. The kitchen also has a large closet which can be used to house a stackable washer and drier, provided by the tenant, or left as a closet.

The apartment has one bedroom which has windows on two of its walls. One wall has a full size window and the second wall has two rectangular windows near the ceiling. The room also has a walk-in closet.

Across the hall from the bedroom is a full bath which has the same sand colored tiles as the entry and kitchen. The tub, sink, and toilet are all white with silver fixtures. In the hallway between the bedroom and bathroom is a linen closet.

The second apartment is slightly larger than the first. The entryway, which is a small hall with tall ceilings running along the back of the building, also has two closets. There are two full-sized double-windows in the entry hall. Two stairs at the end of the hall lead up to the main level, entering the kitchen. The same sand-colored tiles cover the entryway and kitchen floors, and the stairs are the same hardwood oak flooring with a wood railing.

The kitchen has sand colored countertops which extend enough to have an eating area with bar stools. The same appliances are offered in both apartments, and both can accommodate a stacked washer and drier. There is also a pantry with bi-fold doors and overhead lights in the kitchen.

Across from the kitchen is a large combined living and dining area. There are two sets of full-sized double-windows which allows sunlight to filter in, as well as provide a great view of the marsh. A doorway in the living area leads to the bedroom which also has a full-sized double window and walk-in closet.

The full bath is located next to the kitchen and has a sand-colored tile floor, white sink, tub, and toilet and silver fixtures.

Although the paint is still drying, Gruber said the apartments will be ready Sept. 1. A deadline to submit applications for the apartments had been set, but Kathy O'Malley of the historical society said the application deadline has been extended to allow as many applicants to come forward as possible. "We want to be as fair as we possibly can," she said.

There will be a catered open house reception where the public will be invited to tour the apartments at the Paul Pratt Building, located at 106 South Main St., Sunday Aug. 22 from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. For more information please contact the Historical Society at (781) 383-1434 or (781) 383-1168 or stop by the Pratt Building to pick up the necessary application papers between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. weekdays. There will be no pets or smoking allowed. Priority will be given to Cohasset residents. Rent will be $1,500/month and tenants must be 55 years of age or older.

Cohasset's quest for affordable housing

Two senior projects include income mix

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

For most affordable housing projects, housing must be affordable to those making less than 80 percent the area median income, which is roughly $53,000 for a family of two.

Every town in the state of Massachusetts is required to have 10 percent of its total housing stock deemed affordable. For Cohasset, whose total household count is roughly 2,750 has a current affordable housing stock consists of only 76 units – or 2.76 percent — according to the state Department of Housing and Community Development.

The Harborview Apartments, located on Elm Street behind the police and fire stations, currently provide 64 units of affordable senior housing. There are an additional 12 units of affordable special needs housing next to Harborview, which are not designated for seniors. Both complexes are run by the Cohasset Housing Authority, and together, they comprise the only subsidized housing in Cohasset. The complex was built with state funds back in 1974.

The 64 Harborview apartments, which includes four units that can accommodate the handicapped, are designated for those who are at least 60 years of age with an annual income not in excess of $40,600. "The definition of affordable for us and for people trying to develop is different," said Director of the Cohasset Housing Authority Marilyn LeBlanc. Residents pay 30 percent of their net income including utilities to live there, and the average rent at Harborview is about $300 a month.

For most affordable housing projects, housing must be affordable to those making less than 80 percent the area median income, which is roughly $53,000 for a family of two.

Each apartment at Harborview includes a small kitchen, bathroom, living room, and a bedroom. There are movable dividers which enable residents to change the size of the living and bedroom areas. There are four apartments per building and all either have a patio for the lower apartments, or small deck for second level apartments.

There are three new proposals on the horizon for various affordable housing projects in other areas of town. The 200-unit AvalonBay 40B development would be located on the 62-acre former Webb-Norfolk Conveyor site off of Route 3A, and would not be age restrictive. The 105-unit Cedarmere housing complex would be designated for those who are age 55 and older, as would the 95-unit Cook Estate project.

Avalon has been issued a comprehensive permit by the Zoning Board of Appeals under Chapter 40B, the more than 30-year-old state law that allows developers to skirt local zoning regulations in exchange for providing affordable housing in municipalities that fall below the state's 10 percent affordability threshold. Avalon would supply 200 units of rental housing, of which 25 percent, or 50 units, would actually be affordable. The state recognizes the dire need for rental housing, and therefore all rental units are "counted" toward the town's affordable housing stock. The Avalon permit is currently being appealed by the Water Commission, however, if it is ultimately approved, the town could fulfill its entire affordable housing requirement with one development.

The proposed Cedarmere project has filed under the town's Senior Multi-family Residence Overlay District bylaw, under which the Planning Board must grant a special permit. The project would be built on 41 acres of land located off of Beechwood Street on the former Hayes Estate, and would include 105 total units of housing. Of the 105 units, 31 would be affordable and 74 would be market rate. Under the bylaw, the project is entitled to built 410 units of housing, or 10 units for every acre of land.

Fourteen market-rate units would be included in a new grand manor house near the center of the site that would also include an underground parking garage. Plans also include 23 single-family residences and 18 two-family residences in clusters around courtyards, to preserve open space. A barn on site would also be renovated into a single-family residence. All market-rate units would be 2,400 square feet and have two bedrooms. They would start at $650,000.

Twenty-nine affordable one- and two-bedroom units are planned for a building to be constructed near Route 3A with parking for 50 cars. A cabin at the western end of the site would be renovated into two additional affordable units.

While 40B has a 25 percent affordability requirement, so does the town's bylaw. The 31 affordable units put the development over the minimum 26 units required. Affordable units would conform to state guidelines in order to be affordable for someone making 80 percent of the area median income.

The bylaw was adopted by the town to help ward off other 40B projects like Avalon, which are controlled by the state and not by the town itself. Because the projects are required to have an affordable component, they would still work toward the town's goal of meeting the 10 percent affordability threshold set by the state.

Cedarmere's affordable units will be housed in their own building on site, meaning they do not blend in with other housing on the property, and therefore must meet the criteria of a "Lip Units Only" project under the state's Local Initiative Program, in order to "count" toward the town's affordable housing stock. The Board of Selectmen will need to bring the LIP application forward to the state in order for the affordable units to be considered for qualification.

The Planning Board granted Cedarmere a special permit which was conditioned on finding a definitive wastewater solution. Cedarmere had applied for a municipal sewer connection and was denied. Since then, the project has presented an alternative on-site wastewater proposal which has satisfied the condition. When the LIP application was originally brought before the board, it had denied Cedarmere's request to bring the application forward because it said the project did not have a definitive wastewater plan. It is unclear what the outcome would be if Cedarmere brought the application back before the board, as that condition has now been met.

The Cook Estate project is the second project to file under the towns' SMROD bylaw. Endorsed by the Board of Selectmen, the proposed plans drafted by Northland Residential, the company working with the town to build on the site, would build 95 affordable and market rate units on the combined 22-acre Cook parcel on Sohier Street, and the adjacent 8.7 acres of town owned land. The project could have build roughly 300 units of housing under the bylaw, had the soils on site been able to accommodate that many units.

The project would include 58 townhouse-style attached condominium residences and 37 rental apartments. Of the rental units, 28 will be affordable one-bedroom units (split into eight units at 50 percent of the area median income and 20 at 80 percent of the area median income), and nine will be market rate two-bedroom rentals.

Dave Fulton of GLC Development, which has been working with the town and Northland on the Cook project said the for sale units will be priced at between $550,000 and $625,000. There will be a pre-sale period where Northland will market the units to Cohasset residents, and sell at an undetermined discount. The market rate rentals will rent from between $1,400 and $1,900 depending on market rents at the time, he said.

The Cook Estate would also file its affordable units as a LIP project, which selectmen would have to pass on to the state. Currently the project does not have a wastewater solution as plans to have an on-site wastewater disposal system have failed due to soil conditions and an application for municipal sewer hookup has been denied.

In addition to the 76 units of affordable housing Cohasset currently has, two new affordable housing units will be complete by Sept. 1, bringing the total needed units down to 205. Located in the lower level of the Paul Pratt Memorial Building, which is also home to the historical society, the apartments will be made available to tenants of at least 55 years of age. The one-bedroom apartments will rent for $1,500 per month (see related story).

With projects which include condominiums or townhouses, only the affordable units count toward meeting the state's goal. This means the town will need to absorb a higher amount of total housing units in order to reach the 10 percent benchmark. In other words, 800 condos would have to be developed with 25 percent affordability for the town to get the roughly 200 units in its count that Avalon alone would provide.

Three cheers for four-quads

Public safety scored a big win last week, with the surprise — and much hailed — announcement that the MBTA has agreed to install four-quadrant gates at five of the most dangerous grade crossings along the 17.7-mile Greenbush commuter rail line restoration. Greenbush diagnostic teams recommended quad gates.

Weymouth and Braintree residents will benefit from quadrant gates, without medians, at Commercial Street at Front Street in Braintree and at East Street in Weymouth.

The MBTA is also installing quadrant gates at South Street at Fort Hill and West streets. Hingham; Heresy Street, Hingham; and Pleasant Street, Cohasset.

"The use of four-quadrant gates along the Greenbush corridor is an issue that directly impacts the public safety, traffic patterns, and character of every community along the line," state Sen. Robert Hedlund said.

The Weymouth Republican lauded Transportation Secretary and MBTA Chairman Daniel A. Grabauskas for his personal commitment to working with the towns to find an acceptable process for reviewing four quadrant gate treatments.

Eight other grade crossings will be improved with modifications such as shortening medians to avoid blocking driveways or to improve the design and address safety concerns. In total, the MBTA has agreed to design changes at 16 crossings along the Greenbush line.

The battle for the use of four-quadrant gates at certain crossings has a lengthy history. Local town officials have tirelessly advocated for them.

In November 2002, a status report sent by the MBTA to the Army Corps of Engineers addressed the MBTA's plan for grade crossing treatments along the Greenbush line and outlined the MBTA's plan of using two-quadrant gates with median barriers. The MBTA requested that the Army Corps consider the report as conclusive. Initially, the MBTA had refused to consider four-quad gates.

As the ranking minority member of the Transportation Committee, Cohasset's Senator Hedlund joined with town officials from the impacted towns along the Greenbush line to voice support of quadrant gates.

In February 2003, the Army Corp of Engineers, at the request of state and town officials, conducted a public hearing on the use of four-quad gates. Officials pointed out that original agreements between the towns and the MBTA had called for four-quad gates if determined to be safe and not in conflict with other regulations. Officials expressed concerns with the detrimental impact of 60- to 100-foot-long median barriers that would be used with two-quad gates. Barriers would result in safety risks, including ability of emergency vehicles to get by, the four-quad gate advocates told MBTA representatives.

And the towns had data from several other states that showed four-quadrant gates, which have four arms that stop traffic in both directions, can actually be safer than the two-quad system that uses only two arms. And median barriers, which prevent a car from circumventing the gate to beat on oncoming train, can actually pose safety problems for emergency vehicles, as well as blocking driveways and being aesthetically unpleasing. In fact the Federal Railroad Administration proposed that four-quad gates be used when cross traffic, such as driveways, occur within 60 feet of the crossing, four-quad gate advocates stressed.

At the urging of towns along the Greenbush corridor, the MBTA created the diagnostic teams to look at each crossing recommended by each town for four-quadrant gates on individual merits. The teams included a representative from the individual towns. The diagnostic teams issued their report, with their recommendations, to the MBTA in June 2004.

Greenbush host towns have come halfway to meet the MBTA during the long hours of debate and discussion. Towns clearly came to the middle ground on this issue by being open to the fact that the two-quadrant system might be acceptable in certain less hazardous areas and the four-quad gates are better in others.

We applaud the MBTA for doing their part and meeting towns half way by being open to using four-quadrant technology without medians at the intersections recommended by diagnostic teams.

All the efforts in the up-hill battle have paid off in the most important way, in public safety.

Four-quadrant gates will cost more money, but could save lives.

Taking responsibility is a thing of the past

TO THE EDITOR:

To Whom It May Concern:

I'd like to offer an apology to the person who scratched the paint on my car while driving up Parker Ave. on Saturday the 14th at around 1 p.m.

I hope that hitting my car and leaving just the scratched paint didn't take too much of your obviously precious time. I guess taking responsibility for your actions was far too time consuming a matter. You had to know that you hit the car, as there are scratches on the hood and the entire side of the car. I'm sure that concentrating on the 15 MPH speed limit was all your self centered little brain could process.

There seems to be an attitude growing in town that taking responsibility for one's actions is for suckers. Parents willing to pay for damages to a person's house provided their little darlings name can be kept from the police. (Can't ruin their chances for college, can we?) Stealing statues from private property. Pulling U-turns on Main Strett because driving around the block would just take too long. Parking in handicap spaces when you are in a hurry. Courtesy is for everyone else seems to be the mantra.

I'd most like to say I'm sorry that you couldn't even leave a note apologizing for the damage you caused.

Now that I've apologized to you, what are the chances that you'll return the favor? Though I'm not a betting person, I bet the chances are pretty slim.

TV sidewalk vote was not a concept

TO THE EDITOR:

At town meeting last fall, a lot of us innocents voted for concrete sidewalks, in the belief that a vote was a vote with some binding effect. Now we hear the town counsel has ruled that the vote was "only on a concept", which suggests that our vote was meaningless. One of the selectmen (who campaigned on the dual dreams of " getting a handle on costs" and "responsiveness to citizens" interpreted the "only a concept" opinion as license to promote brick sidewalks, then switched to favoring concrete pavers.

Perhaps to introduce an element of dysfunctional spice, others suggested the notion of asphalt sidewalks, but this notion seems to have had the short life it deserved. Well, maybe not, bad ideas often are vigorously promoted.

It seems to me that the appropriate compromise between cost, appearance, maintainability, safety and comfort would be poured concrete for most areas, scored/colored concrete (or concrete pavers) in very limited areas such as at crossings, and small brick islands or channels around utilities or anything likely to need be dug up occasionally. Snow and ice removal works best with poured concrete, but adds the costs of replacing displaced pavers or bricks.

On another subject, I agree with Peter Guild. Most of our teen-agers are good people who will grow into responsible and caring adults. The irresponsible scofflaws, and the careless and/or arrogant parents guilty of the sad state of their progeny, are much in the minority. Besides most the scofflaws will be subject some molding by the good influences of our society, so that they turn out to be not much worse than the rest of us.

CEES asks for 'Fairness Guidelines'

TO THE EDITOR:

The following letter was sent to selectmen with a copy to the Mariner.

Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions, "CEES", on behalf of our many hundreds of members and supporters throughout Cohasset, has adopted a set of Policy Fairness Guidelines that address the ongoing questions of how and why the Town should allocate and/or reserve, for priority or mandated future requirements, the limited, valuable Central Sewer Treatment Plant capacity. We define capacity to include both current operating capacity as well as new capacity to be obtained over time from Town Meeting approved Plant upgrades and optimizations funded specifically to meet an identified need within a District and adopted by the Town, or imposed on the Town by Court Order or other regulatory agency having jurisdiction.

CEES urges the Board of Selectmen, as the policy-making arm of Town Government, to utilize these Fairness Guidelines as the core principles for developing a formal Policy Statement that reflects fairness and voters expectations relative to the allocation of limited, valuable Central Plant sewer capacity. Given all the questions, debates, conflicts, hearings and lawsuits that have risen around this topic in recent months, the need for a comprehensive Policy Statement is obvious. It would be most desirable at next Town Meeting for the voters to approve a Policy that incorporates the following Fairness Guidelines and thus reduce the current inefficiencies and expenses for all parties involved, especially the Town. A Policy Statement that is consistent with State statues and other governing agencies, and reflects the past practices of the Town and the preferences of the existing residents to the maximum extent possible, would be welcomed by all parties as notice "up front" as to what can be expected, allowed and disallowed in the Town of Cohasset before unsound actions and expectations are adopted. It certainly would make the job of the Sewer Commission easier and would minimize conflicts that "special interests" can create when firm policies and practices are not clearly spelled out in advance and practiced on a consistent basis by all Town Officials.

Fairness guidelines

• Available capacity and expected future capacity should be allocated first to existing residents and house lots whose taxes helped pay for the capacity construction and for the cost to connect neighborhoods already served. They have been waiting for years to be connected into the system. No compromise allowed! Existing residents first!

• Expected new capacity to be generated by upgrades and optimization of the Treatment Plant and the collection system using funding approved at Town Meeting for a specific sewering requirement of a Sewer District, should be used or reserved to fulfill the specific sewering requirement that justified the funding approval. Such new capacity may not be diverted for use other than as intended.

• Formally designated Sewer Districts, approved at Town Meeting by the voters, should be selected and prioritized to meet existing environmental needs in the best interests of the Town as a whole, such as protection of the water supply, addressing known pollution problems in previously developed areasof the Town that are ill-suited for on-site waste water treatment, protection of Town assets in areas that have exceptional environmental sensitivities such as public beaches, lakes and ponds, coastal waters, unique wildlife habitat, shell fishing areas and the like, and complying with Court judgments or other regulatory orders by a governmental agency having authority and jurisdiction.

• Residents of existing buildings and existing house lots are entitled to sewer tie-in within a Town Meeting approved Sewer District that is already substantially tied- in to the sewer system providing capacity is available that is not reserved for nor was funded specifically at Town Meeting for a higher priority sewer need in a different District. If no available capacity exists at the time of receipt of an eligible tie-in application, the Sewer Commission shall maintain a queue until such time as available capacity allows the tie-ins to proceed in the order in which the applications were received. Such queued applications within a Town Meeting approved Sewer District shall have priority over any sewer tie-in of applicants from outside that District, or otherwise ineligible to apply for a tie-in, such as a new subdivision that results in more than one additional EDU.

• A new, proposed Sewer District submitted by the Sewer Commission for Town Meeting approval shall consist of a contiguous area of a previously developed community for which sewering meets an existing, prioritized environmental need in the best interests of the Town as a whole to remedy if sewer capacity is available. The proposed District is to be defined by the Sewer Commission using a single, contiguous boundary consisting of common landmarks such as streets, rivers, and the like or, preferably, a District Lot Level Analysis.

• For as long as there are recognized needs that justify sewer service in the communities and neighborhoods existing in the Town at the time of the adoption of this Policy, which sewer service shall have a fair and generally beneficial impact on the Town as a whole, sewer capacity, as available, shall be allocated to those existing needs of existing residents and shall not be diverted to service major, new housing developments proposed to be built in the Town.

Olympic theatre in three parts: Saturday, Day 1

DISPATCH FROM ATHENS

MIKE ELLIS

Newspapers in Athens are all about the Olympics.

Drama. The Greeks love a good drama — and they've certainly got one. The IOC will likely have decided the fate of Greece's top two sprinters, Costas Kenteris and Katerina Thanou by time you read this. But now the pair must be judged in the court of Greek public opinion — a far more daunting prospect.

The day after their mysterious midnight motorcycle wreck — which came hours after missing their doping control test — we find Athenians still glued to their TV sets. It's as festive as a wake. Reporters nervously chain-smoke cigarettes outside the hospital where the two have been sequestered. I know, since the hospital is just down the street from our home. Even though their injuries are said to be minor, the pair have won a 48-hour reprieve from explaining their midnight run to the IOC. And there is no indication that either will be leaving the hospital soon. The logic here in Greece; if you have a doctor's note, you can be excused from almost anything — maybe even doping control.

Now, as the two lay in a hospital bed watching their own drama unfold on TV, they can ponder the fate of other tragic Greek heroes.

Comedy. Costas and Katarina may find it harder to prove their innocence in a public opinion trial, however. The Greek people would like to believe that it was all just a big misunderstanding. They want to hear Costas say something like "Well, the souvlaki was bad up there at the Olympic village, so we drove like maniacs to our favorite taverna instead of attending our scheduled doping appointment." This defense would seem reasonable to the average Greek ("How do you expect them to win on bad souvlaki!"), and it might even fly with the ubiquitous news commentary shows, which cater to the average Greek. Using what we call the Brady Bunch Effect, they can squeeze as many as 12 talking heads onto a Greek TV screen at any one time, all enthusiastically sharing their point of view. The rules are simple — loudest head wins the argument. A similar thing can happen on the radio. A typical host might patch six of his buddies through on their cell phones, some of them riding scooters, and prompt them with a taunt: "What do you think Yianni? Souvlaki or Human Growth Hormone?" Once that happens, it's all static and screaming.

Tragedy. The sad thing is that Greece — before the games — had thoroughly celebrated these two as paragons of the possible. Especially Kenteris, who dashed out of obscurity in the Sydney Olympics to snatch the men's 200 meters. Always underestimated, the Greeks heralded his victory no less than a thunderbolt from Zeus himself — a reminder of the character of the first Olympians. As the Olympic standard-bearer and the Michael Jordan of his small country, you would always see Kenteris' ready smile and fast feet selling speedy shipping services, or cavorting with groups of Greek schoolchildren.

Same with Thanou, whose second place to Marion Jones in the women's 100 meters only confirmed Zeus' message. In the lead-up to the games, not a day would pass without a full review of her silver medal performance.

Now, as the two lay in a hospital bed watching their own drama unfold on TV, they can ponder the fate of other tragic Greek heroes. They rose high — touched the sun — frolicked with the gods — then nose-dived into the blue Aegean. A classic story, and their dramatic timing perfect: the day when Greece was set to dance on the world stage.

The mood in Athens is somber this morning, the spectacle of the opening ceremonies swept away by events. But Greece is nothing if not resilient, as it has been for the last 3,000 years. Already you can sense a transition from scandal to eulogy for the fallen heroes, as if the Greeks are expecting another homegrown champion to emerge in the next two weeks to carry on their Olympic ideal.

Mike Ellis migrated west to Colorado soon after graduating CHS ('82). He is providing weekly updates for us during the Olympics.

Let's hear it for 'purring'

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I see where the finest athletes in the world have gathered in Athens to compare their running, jumping and throwing talents and apparently test the efficiency of the latest steroids as well.

But that's a subject for another column.

My complaint this time is that once again the International Olympic Committee has ignored a sport that has become my favorite although I have never played it, never seen it played and never met anyone who has played it.

It's called "purring," and it has nothing to do with cats but everything to do with a manly sport as played by Welsh miners in the pubs of Cardiff. Some, but not many, have even have been known to come back and play a second time.

There is to my knowledge no rule book in purring for the simple reason that there are no rules but if there were it would read something like this:

"The contestants put on heavy shoes, with reinforced tips. They stand facing each other, hands on the other's shoulders. On signal, they start kicking each other's shins.

"The man who releases the hold on the opponent's shoulder first, and backs away, to save his shin bones from being reduced to talcum powder, is the loser."

Really now, if you were a member of the IOC would you vote for beach volleyball over purring as an Olympic sport?

There are so many sports in the Olympics now that the American team had to be ferried to Athens in shifts. A few years ago, tropical Jamaica even had a bobsled team. For all I know, landlocked Switzerland may have a beach volleyball team.

The next thing you know, they'll be bringing back face-slapping as an Olympic sport. Don't laugh. It was the "in" thing in the Soviet Union in the early 1930s when the only alternative was another five-year plan.

It started in a little bistro in Kiev in 1931 when Michalko Goniusx put down his glass of vodka and playfully slapped Wasyl Bezbordny in the face. Wasyl put aside his slivovitz and slapped him back and the contest was on.

The guy on the next barstool appointed himself referee. After 10 hours, they wore out the referee and another was named. After 20 hours, a third ref took over. By the time Michalko and Wasyl reached 30 hours, he was ready to end it.

"It is silly, very silly," he said, confiding an obvious truth to the bloodied contestants. "Stop this and go home."

They did and the referee ruled the bout a draw but the game they played caught on and for a while the sound of open hand against cheek was heard in the land as farmers from the collective went after Michalko and Wasyl's record.

If that doesn't grab you, how about bull racing which was once so popular on the island of Madura in the Indonesian chain that special courses, called "aloon-aloons" were built for them.

Two bulls race as a team, separated by a thick piece of wood on which the jockey sits. The starter waves a red flag to anger the bulls. A man in red runs ahead of them and a band plays during the race to agitate them even more.

Now if they could only get that one past PETA and the animal people.

North Scituate Center could be source of pollution

Edging ever closer to identifying conclusively the immediate source (or sources) of pollution in the Gulf River watershed, CSCR students acted last week on advice gleaned from consultations with Scituate Health Agent Jennifer Sullivan, Jason Burtner and Julie Keane of Massachusetts' Coastal Zone Management program, and John Hartshorne, a founding member of the Gulf Association.

Convinced that the North Scituate area of the Gulf River is a location where pollutants are introduced into the watershed, CSCR students hope to trace the pollution's entry point into the marsh and then identify expedient solutions. Agreeing that the data collected by students strongly suggested the North Scituate marsh as the culprit, proposed that the CSCR conduct dye tests in order to trace outfall from various storm drains in the North Scituate center and along Gannett Road. Dye testing consists of releasing a small amount of environmentally-safe, colored dye into storm drains at key locations in order to determine or verify terminal drainage points. Confirmation is achieved with visual identification of the dye at a specific drainage point.

After obtaining official municipal storm drain maps from the Scituate Town Hall, and authorization to so act, students and their supervisors were eager to finalize their results and attempted to trace one drain on Aug. 11. The lack of rainfall over the previous 72 hours (Aug 8-11) created less-than-optimal conditions, prompting one student to make a bet for a slice of pizza that "no red dye will come out of that drain [at the outflow pipe]." But to its surprise, the group recorded a flaming-magenta stream, confirming that storm drains from North Scituate center emptied directly into a holding pool along Gannett Road that then appears to flows into the Gulf River.

The group recorded a flaming-magenta stream, confirming that storm drains from North Scituate center emptied directly into a holding pool along Gannett Road that then appears to flows into the Gulf River.

Even in dry conditions, the total time from insertion to outfall was approximately 30 minutes. Similar results were recorded during another dye test this Monday, Aug. 16, but at a more remote storm drain in the North Scituate village area. Notably, the water in the drainage pool has consistently shown to be dangerously low in oxygen, significantly high in nitrates, and excessively high in enterococci bacteria.

While the holding pool does not overflow directly into the marsh, CSCR teacher Jack Buckley was quick to reach the hypothesis that the effluent sinks into the underlying soil, runs under an adjacent driveway, and subsequently enters the contiguous marsh. "Although our hypothesis, to our knowledge, has not yet been confirmed by hydrologists," commented Buckley, "the flow from the outfall culvert into the Gulf River can easily be seen by any observer who stops for a moment to connect the dots." In addition, noting the thick, greasy scum on the surface of the holding pool, students suspected that much of the discharge must be also be flowing from residential and/or commercial kitchens and bathrooms. Student suspicions are only further hardened by the numerous comments spoken by area residents and curious passersby who echo this hunch.

CSCR students, in their youthful enthusiasm, were hopeful that permission might be obtained to conduct dye tests in residential and commercial properties. However, officials have been quick to point out to students that the politics and economics of managing wastewater in all of our communities on the South Shore require solutions that are more comprehensive and less confrontational. Rather than trying to gain consent to dye test individual homes and businesses which might then subject consenting owners to the financial burden of replacing or repairing faulty wastewater systems, officials have suggested to students that they pursue grant funding to help municipalities implement practices and procedures to mitigate the non-point source pollution discovered in this section of the Gulf River.

Toward that end, CSCR is hosting a meeting Aug. 25 at 3p.m. for Cohasset and Scituate officials, board members, and community leaders to outline specific tasks that can completed as part of a grant project to reduce or eliminate non-point source pollution in the Gulf River estuary. Says Buckley, "the approach to this meeting is collaborative. We want to convene the interested parties in one room where we can approach solutions to the problems quantified by the students. That's the mission of CSCR — to engage students in projects designed to meet the identified needs of municipal boards and departments already working hard to solve these problems."

In the meantime, students will soon be wrapping up their summer investigations of the Gulf River and Cohasset Harbor. In addition, students are preparing a draft report to summarize their findings in the Gulf River to be presented to officials at the Aug. 25 meeting. At that time, a cookout for all students and their families will be held at 5p.m. to celebrate the end of a highly productive summer of research. Residents interested in joining the students at the cookout should feel free to call CSCR at 383 0129 to let us know that you'll be joining us.

HEALTH NOTES

Cleaning up after dogs is a public health issue

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

When I was a kid, dogs weren't a problem. You let them out and that was that. But now things are a bit more complicated, and pets need more attention and oversight. Last Saturday at 9 a.m. there were 15 dogs on Sandy Beach. They weren't bothering anybody, and they were well behaved; after all, the beach wasn't open yet, and they had a right, but you'd have thought it was a gathering of the Cohasset Kennel Club.

The Board of Health has long recognized that there are certain responsibilities that go along with dog ownership. There is always the confirmation that rabies shots are current, implicit in the act of updating dog licenses, and there are the mutt mitt stations which the Board of Health supplies around the common and elsewhere, and then there's the ordinance. In 1999 the board, recognizing that the number of complaints had been increasing, passed a regulation which is given in its entirety below.

But there's another reason besides good housekeeping, cleanliness and good health practices to consider cleaning up after your pet, even if it's in your own yard and not covered by the regulation. Pollution from storm-water runoff is called non-point source or NPS contamination. For Cohasset, non-point source pollution is mainly from surface water runoff to storm drains and catch basins which direct it to our ponds, streams and estuaries. Most contamination comes at the beginning of storm events during what is known as first flush, or the first inch or so from a rain event, when accumulated surface contaminants on roadways and driveways, roofs, lawns and fields flow into the storm drains and out into the waterways. According to the DEP, storm-water runoff is a major source of pollution entering our waterways. And animal feces are a major contributor to the pollution in storm-water runoff. To the point that dogs were mentioned in the last pollution study of Little Harbor done for the town in 1999 by CDM, an environmental consultant engineering firm. The EPA has implemented regulations covering non-point source contamination. As a result, the town is in a continuing dialog with the state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs having addressed cleanup of major point sources of pollution such as landfills, industrial contamination, etc.

So dogs are important! They are a constant source of companionship and solace to many in Cohasset, but pets come with responsibilities. It's a short regulation, but it's also important. Help the Town with its fight against pollution by heeding its provisions.

Regulations

- Authority: This regulation is promulgated under the authority of MGL Chapter 111 Sections 31 and 122.
- Purpose: To abate the potential health danger in public places of fecal material from dogs.
- Applicability: This regulation applies to all persons who own, possess, care for or control a dog while located within the area of the Town of Cohasset.
- General:

1.) Any person who owns, possess, cares for or controls a dog shall take every precaution to not permit his or her dog to defecate on any sidewalk, street, parking lot or any other public place. Further, the above pertains to private property not owned by the above person.

2.) It is the responsibility of any person cited above to promptly remove any fecal matter deposited on a public place or on private property not owned by that person and properly disposed of.

- Enforcement: This regulation shall be enforced by the Board of Health and its agent and the Cohasset Animal Control Officer under the provision of M.G.L. Chapter 40, Section 21D.
- Fines for Violation: For a first offense, the fine is $25.00; for a second, $35.00; and for a third and subsequent offenses, $50.
- Exemption: This regulation shall not apply to any dog accompanying any disabled person, who because of his or her disability is unable to comply with these requirements.
- Effective Date: This regulation shall take effect on January 1, 2000.

Two residents seek sewer connections in Central District

But don't get the answer they want

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

It's a different story but the same argument, as two residents came before the Sewer Commission Monday looking for sewer capacity, citing state law which prohibits reserving capacity in anticipation of what might happen in the future.

Both Donna Donovan and Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan came before the commission in anticipation of being able to tie their subdivided lots into the municipal lines. Both pieces of property are completely within the Central District, and both landowners have come before the commission before.

Sullivan's and Donovan's pieces of property were not considered buildable lots when the connection schedule for the Cohasset Central Sewer District was drafted, and have since been subdivided. Both believe their land should be included in the list of connections as every other abutting home is eligible. Sullivan said this is the third time he has come before the commission, the first being last August, the second this March. Both times he said he was told the commission would need more time to study the impacts of new connections in the central district before additional connections could be made.

Sewer lines run past both pieces of property, and Sullivan said state law requires that if municipal sewer is required in an area, as it is in the central district, any owner of property which has pipes running in front "shall" be tied in, unless it can be proved the connection will do immediate damage. For connections outside the district, the commission can allow connections at its own discretion. Sullivan said his property or the Donovan property would not put such a strain on the flows to the Wastewater Treatment Plant that it would cause immediate damage. He said he has looked at the data for the plant, and flows are down from last year, and the roughly 250 gallons his property or the Donovan property would generate daily is nothing compared to the average 100,000 daily gallons the plant doesn't use. Sullivan said that is what the law says, and the town's bylaws do not overstep state law.

Both believe their land should be included in the list of connections as every other abutting home is eligible.

"Your case is valid," said Sewer Commissioner Raymond Kasperowicz, adding his main concern is how many other pieces of property may have had the same situation, and would also like to connect. To date, there have been four or five similar requests which have all been denied. Sullivan said there are probably eight to 10 at the most, and as far as he is concerned, hook-ups would still be on a first come first serve basis. If the commission finds tying in a few subdivided lots is putting a strain on the system, Sullivan said future tie-ins can be rejected, but with the average flows the way they are currently, he can't see that a few homes would cause a major overflow. Sullivan added he would like to see Donovan's property tied in before his, as he knows she came before the commission long before he did.

Daniel Coughlin of Tutela Engineering, the commission's engineering consultant, said, "If capacity were to be available," and it would not pose pressing issues for existing homes, he doesn't see why the commission couldn't allow some limited expansion. His only concern would be whether there were parcels in the central district which could accommodate for multiple dwellings.

"You can't hold someone off in anticipation of what might happen," said Sullivan.

Cedarmere developers argued that same point before the commission just over one year ago. Sewer Commissioner John Beck pointed out that Cedarmere's request is much different from the residents' request because the development would be located outside the Central District.

The commission said last year, it denied Sullivan's request because it wasn't sure what the flows would be and now, while the flows look like they're less, there are still 34 connections to be made within the district.

"When does the law take precedent and when does fairness come it?" Sullivan asked. "The law says I have a right, and I'm sorry, but I just don't get it. "

Kasperowicz said the bottom line is, the commission doesn't want to allow too many people to hook up and get the town into trouble. "Don't take a run at us and say we're not being fair," he said.

But Sullivan said the town is on average using 220,000 gallons per day with a capacity of 350,000 gallons, and that is where the fairness should come in. "If the law wasn't stating I have a right, there wouldn't be a problem," he said.

Kasperowicz said while the

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Cohasset Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for more than 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives and senators' votes on three roll calls from recent sessions. There were no roll call votes in the House or Senate last week.

$2.5 BILLION TRANSPORTATION BOND (H 5041)

House 149-5, Senate 35-0, gave final approval to a $2.5 billion transportation bond bill that authorizes borrowing for transportation projects across the state including roads, bridges, subways and commuter rail. The package also includes $450 million for local road and bridge projects. Gov. Romney signed the measure after vetoing several provisions. Supporters said the package is an important one that would continue to improve the state's roads, highways and public transportation system. Opponents offered no arguments. In his veto message, Romney said the bill is excessive and authorizes more than $1 billion for projects that have not undergone adequate review. He noted that all the projects would be reviewed and only projects that meet his rigorous criteria would be funded. (A "Yea" vote is for the transportation bond bill. A "Nay" vote is against it).

TRANSFERRING STATE EMPLOYEES (H 4850)

House 143-12, Senate 37-1, overrode Gov. Romney's veto of a budget section providing that if the functions performed by state employees are transferred from one state agency to another, the employees who perform the function would also be transferred to the new agency without any salary reduction or loss of rights. The section does allow for a reduction in workforce that is permitted under collective bargaining agreements or civil service regulations. Override supporters said this pro-worker section would protect state employees and ensure that experienced workers continue to perform their jobs at the new agency. Override opponents said the section goes too far and argued that the Legislature should not interfere with and try to control what should be executive branch decisions. (A "Yea" vote is for the section providing for the transfer of the employees. A "Nay" vote is against the transfer).

LOW INCOME HOUSING AND COURTS (H 4911)

House 154-0, gave final approval to and Gov. Romney signed into law a bill including a five-year extension of the low-income housing tax credit to private and non-profit developers who build low income housing projects. Other provisions include bond authorizations of $200 million for programs that help provide housing for battered women and people who are disabled, homeless and mentally ill or retarded and $220 million for courthouse projects. Supporters said the package would create additional standard affordable housing for many people and specialized housing for those with special needs. They noted that the courthouse authorization would help important projects at courts in Salem, Lowell, Taunton and Quincy. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).

CHANGES IN TAX LAWS (H 4744)

Senate 37-0 and 36-0, approved and Gov. Romney signed into law a bill making changes in some of the state's business and individual tax laws. There was no opposition to the bill in the Senate or in the House that approved the measure on a voice vote without a roll call. Romney and the Legislature contend that the major changes simply close corporate tax loopholes that corporations have been using to avoid taxes. Many business leaders say that the changes are unfair and are simply cleverly disguised tax hikes. Supporters of the bill said the changes would generate some $90 million in new tax revenue. They noted that a key provision would generate $40 million by closing a giant loophole that allows Massachusetts companies to shield tax gains from the sale of their subsidiaries by setting up a Business Trust Holding Company. Opponents said these changes are nothing more than tax hikes approved by a governor and Legislature that said they would not raise taxes. They argued that the tax increases are anti-business and would hurt many corporations. The bill also allows the state to collect outstanding taxes directly from the Lottery winnings of delinquent taxpayers. Another provision automatically withholds the state and federal tax portion of any Lottery player's winnings above $600. Current law withholds the taxes of only winnings over $5000. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill making changes in tax laws)

ALSO UP ON BEACON HILL

FROZEN FOOD PRICES (H 490)- The House and Senate gave final approval to and sent to Gov. Romney a bill exempting all frozen food products from the current law requiring that most products sold in supermarkets be individually marked with their selling price. The measure requires that a clear and conspicuous separate sign including the name and price of the product be placed near the item. Other items already exempted under current law include gallons and half gallons of milk, eggs, tobacco products, soft drink bottles and cans and some snack food items at the checkout area.

Walk through chapters of times gone by at new exhibit

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

With the publication of its new book, "Images of America: Cohasset," the Cohasset Historical Society has produced the first pictorial history of the town, bringing residents back to the days of summer homes and fishing villages. However, to really bring the images to life, the society is showcasing the many artifacts and photos from its archives that help illustrate the story depicted in the book.

Using the chapters to organize the exhibit, various Cohasset photographs and relics are on display for the public to enjoy. The book was only able to accommodate roughly 200 photographs from about 2,000 in the society's archives, and the exhibit has made it possible to bring additional photos to the forefront, as well as artifacts that could not be included in the book.

"The images in the exhibit have either been taken from the book or complement the book," said society co-president Paula Morse. "We've got a wonderful collection."

Morse said the move from the former society headquarters at the Lothrop House to the larger Paul Pratt Building on South Main Street has allowed the society to be able to show its extensive collection year round. The Pratt building is both air conditioned and heated to allow for maximum climate control, where the Lothrop House only had heat.

Authors David H. Wadsworth, historian and former curator of the society for 20 years, Morse, and Lynne DeGiacomo, executive administrator, began working on the book last spring. Its roughly 130 pages are filled with black and white images of days gone by. With photos of the common, the villages (there used to be three) and residents from schoolchildren and fishermen to those who only spent their summers in town — the book depicts a wide variety of photos from Cohasset's history with detailed captions to help give readers insight.

The exhibit also displays some of the society's most prized possessions. A women's navy blue linen bathing suit, which would have been worn in 1914, is on display as well as a beautiful white eyelet summer dress, and other photos and relics which help bring the book's summer colony chapter to life.

Cohasset's theatrical past is also represented with posters for South Shore Players productions, as well as photos of the original Music Circus tent. Photos of the Hanlon Brothers, who were known worldwide for their acrobatic shows, are also on display. Co-vice president of the historical society, Tom Gruber, said the Hanlons brought their company, which had about 200 members, to Cohasset to recuperate from touring during the summer of 1889 and prepare for the next season's production. In those days, having performers of that magnitude in town was huge, Gruber said. Hanlon productions grew from mostly tumbling and trapeze acts in the beginning, to include pantomime and tricks featuring illusions. Gruber said the brothers even went on to patent some of their illusion equipment. The society has one of the Hanlon brothers' props on display which was used during their shows — a very realistic-looking papier-mâché ax.

The historical society also has artifacts from Cohasset's sporting history, including a football helmet which is nothing like the fiberglass helmets players wear today. Photos of former high school sports teams, including football and basketball are also on display.

A "family tree" with the names of many prominent longtime Cohasset families stands in the middle of the exhibit. There are also photos of the Paul Pratt building from the days when it was brand new. Relics from the not-so-distant past have also been unearthed, as menus from the former Hugo's restaurant have also been included in the exhibit.

To purchase a copy of "Images of America: Cohasset," please stop by the Cohasset Historical Society to fill out an order form, or order by phone at (781) 383-1434. Half of the proceeds from the sale of the books go toward the society when purchased at the Historical Society building. The Historical Society is open from 10-4 during the week, and visitors are always welcome. The exhibit is open during regular Historical Society hours, as well as during the open house for the new apartments located on the lower level of the Pratt Building, which will be held Sunday, Aug. 22 from 4 to 6 p.m.

Greenbush could make tracks in '06

Answers to train questions

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Commuters from Scituate to Weymouth could be encouraged to let someone else do the driving in two years, as the Greenbush Commuter Rail Line is slated to begin operating in mid-2006. The MBTA estimates about 4,200 passengers per weekday will ride the Greenbush each way by the year 2010.

Plans to reconstruct the 17-mile Greenbush line have been in the works for 20 years, and have been surrounded in much controversy over the years. The Greenbush Line is the third leg of the Old Colony Railroad Restoration Project, and is being built as mitigation for the Central Artery/Tunnel Project in downtown Boston. The project is intended to reduce automobile traffic on the congested highways leading into the city. By diverting South Shore commuter traffic from automobiles to transit, the MBTA says it will not only help keep the roads clear, reduce fuel consumption and air pollution, but will encourage more transit-oriented development and alleviate congestion on other transportation facilities in the area - including the Braintree Red Line. According to the MBTA, the project will cost roughly $479 million including planning, engineering, land and permitting costs, along with the cost of construction and new trains.

Although exact train schedules have not been set, MBTA officials say it will take approximately one hour to get from Scituate to South Station. There will be 12 trips each way for daily trains during the week. During the weekends, service will be on a reduced schedule similar to other commuter rails currently in operation, with eight round-trips planned for Saturdays and Sundays. All trains leaving from Scituate are expected make seven stops on the Greenbush Line and some trains will make additional stops at Quincy Center and Boston's South Station.

Stops at the Quincy Center Red Line station will enable passengers to change trains there. All Greenbush trains will stop at Quincy Center, and many Greenbush Line trains will also stop at the JFK/UMASS Red Line station, the MBTA says.

Greenbush trains will terminate at South Station in Boston, located at the corner of Summer Street and Atlantic Avenue in the financial district where commuters can hop on other transportation services including Amtrak inter-city trains, inter-city bus service, buses to Logan Airport, MBTA Silver Line buses to the South Boston Waterfront, Red Line trains to Cambridge and Somerville, local bus services, and taxis.

Trains are expected to operate between approximately 5:45 a.m. and 11 p.m. The MBTA says trains spending the night at the layover facility in Scituate will not idle during the night, except in unusual circumstances such as a power failure or unusually cold weather (below 10 degrees Fahrenheit). The layover facility will be equipped with an electrical heating system that the trains will be plugged into to allow the locomotives to be turned off overnight. Station lights will be turned off after the last train of the evening, the MBTA says.

Each station platform on the Greenbush Line will have a lit shelter with benches and passenger information displays for riders waiting for trains or waiting to be picked up. Stations will not have attendants or enclosed waiting rooms. The MBTA says all commuter rail trains will be handicapped accessible, and all station platforms will be raised to the floor level of the coaches over their entire length for easy boarding.

Parking ranges from 200 total parking spaces to 1,000 spaces at the seven stations on the line. The MBTA says it will work with local police to enforce parking restrictions around commuter parking lots. The current charge for parking in commuter rail lots is $2 per day, with no charge on weekends and holidays.

Fares to ride the Greenbush line will be charged based on the MBTA's zone fare system. Riders can purchase one-way or monthly passes. Monthly passes permit unlimited local bus and rapid transit use as well as commuter rail use up to the zone listed (see sidebar for parking and pass information).

Tickets and passes will be available at the South Station ticket office and from the MBTA's Web site. One-way and round-trip tickets will also be available from the conductors on the trains. As with other commuter rail lines, the MBTA hopes to make arrangements with stores near the stations to sell commuter rail tickets.

When the train begins operating, there will be minor changes to bus routes to allow the Route 225 (Quincy Center-Lincoln Square) buses to stop at the Weymouth Landing station and the Route 222 (Quincy Center – Jackson Square) buses to stop at the East Weymouth station. There are no changes currently being proposed to commuter boat service as part of the Greenbush project, but proposals for improvements to the commuter boat services are being discussed. Train service on the Kingston/Plymouth and Middleborough/Lakeville Commuter Rail Lines will not be reduced as a result of the Greenbush Line, but there may be minor adjustments to their schedules when Greenbush service starts. Red Line service will not change, the MBTA says.

Safety first

While the Greenbush Line is being designed to qualify as a "Quiet Zone," where train horns, or whistles, are not routinely sounded at grade crossings, they may be used occasionally for other purposes such as to warn maintenance workers, or for emergency situations where someone on the tracks might need to be warned of an impending train.

The MBTA says it is committed to providing safe grade crossings, and all crossings will be equipped with warning systems consisting of flashing red lights, bells, and gates. Because there will not be routine whistles, additional safety measures will be implemented, such as median strips or four-quadrant gates at most crossings. The MBTA also participates in the Operation Lifesaver railroad safety education program, a national program that provides railroad safety education programs to schools and community groups trough municipal police departments.

The MBTA says its personnel will inspect and maintain the crossing warning systems on a regular basis to ensure they are kept in good working order. There will be a total of 25 public and 3 private grade crossings on the Greenbush Line. A total of 15 crossings that originally existed will be eliminated through the construction of underpasses in Weymouth Landing, Weymouth Heights, and Hingham Square, an overpass at Rocky Lane in Cohasset, and the closure or avoidance of seven other crossings. Fencing will be installed in all inhabited public areas, which constitute about 85 percent of the line. Fencing will generally be roughly 6 feet high, heavy-duty chain link fence, placed along the railroad property lines.

The trains will operate at speeds up to 60 mph, but the MBTA says they will travel more slowly around station stops and sharp curves. The trains will typically have five or six coaches using a mix of single- and double-level cars. The line is designed to accommodate trains with up to nine cars.

Freight trains will only operate in East Braintree where local rail freight service operates currently, although freight service could potentially be expanded east of East Braintree. However, due to a lack of potential freight customers along the line, expansion is unlikely. The MBTA does not operate freight service.

The MBTA says it inspects, services, and repairs its rail lines on a regular basis. Much of this work will be done during normal business hours, however, it will be necessary on occasion to perform certain maintenance work at night or on weekends to avoid disruptions to train service.

Environmental concerns

The Greenbush Line is being built along an established rail bed, which was originally constructed in the 1850s. The approval of the Greenbush project's Final Environmental Impact Report on Aug. 17, 2001 allowed the MBTA to proceed with land acquisition, vehicle procurement, final design, and construction of the project. Construction is currently underway in areas where site-specific wetland permits are not required. Construction has not yet begun in Cohasset, as wetland permits have not been obtained. The MBTA says all wetland permits have been applied for and construction in wetland areas will commence once the applicable permits are issued.

The MBTA says the project will inflict a number of marginal impacts to wetlands as a result of the reestablishment of railroad drainage ditches, improvements to bridges and culverts, construction of slopes and retaining walls, and other similar work. A total of less than 3-1/2 acres of permanent wetland impact are spread out over the 18-mile length of the project. Extensive environmental enhancements, including a total of nine acres of wetlands restoration, will be provided by the MBTA to compensate for the 3-1/2 acres of permanent wetland impact. The MBTA says it will also be providing an extensive package of endangered species mitigation and enhancements to ensure the project provides a net benefit to endangered species.

So long Charley!

Reporter runs into hurricane

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

On a Boeing 757 bound for Orlando, I should have seen the warning signs as I stared out the window. At 35,000 feet up, I saw a brightly colored rainbow, which normally would have seemed like a good omen, but as a bolt of lightning shot through the clouds soon after, I realized Mother Nature does not cater to Disney vacations.

I had never been to Disney World before, and apparently neither had Hurricane Charley, and we both couldn't wait to reach our final destination. Fortunately I made it to Orlando first, and was able to have one full day at the parks before running for cover.

Messages over the intercom continually informed park guests of the impending evacuation and as fast as Cinderella's carriage turned into a pumpkin, when the clock struck 1, the mass exodus began.

While waiting to board our plane, the weather channel informed us we were about to fly into what would soon become the path of a "Category 1" hurricane. Another passenger turned to us and said, "We're flying into that?" with a somewhat horrified look on her face. My mother and I flew out from Logan International Airport in Boston on Aug. 11 at roughly 3 p.m.

When the plane landed, it was clear the area had just been hit with an afternoon shower from the puddles on the runway, but the sun was shining. After making our way from the airport to Walt Disney World, finding our hotel and checking in, we arrived at our room in Disney's Caribbean Beach Resort at around 8p.m.

My brother John, his wife Tammy, and their three children, Logan, 9, Autumn, 5-1/2, and Hope, 10 months, had taken a road trip down the east coast, stopping along the way, but steadily cruising toward the sunshine state. A group of avid campers, they had planned to pitch their tent along the way, and had made reservations to stay at Disney's Fort Wilderness Camp Grounds. By the time my mother and I reached Florida, my brother had already been told plans to evacuate the campgrounds were imminent.

We spent our first day at the Magic Kingdom, knowing we had to prioritize because there was a good chance we might not again be able to visit the parks during this trip. Never having been to Disney before, I had only seen Cinderella's castle on TV or in postcards, and couldn't pass up the opportunity to have my picture taken in front of a true Disney classic. My mother and I headed off to the parks while my brother and his family packed up their campsite, and waited to hear what might become of their plans. Fortunately, they had become well versed in packing up their site during the trip, and we all met in front of the castle around 10:30 a.m.

In true Orlando fashion, the weather was hotter and stickier than I had ever known was possible, but we received some relief during what I now know is seen as a typical afternoon thundershower. In a matter of minutes the sky opened up, unleashing a deluge of water, soaking those who had forgotten their ponchos. However, this short shower was nothing compared with what was to come.

Trees were uprooted all over Orlando after Hurricane Charley ushered in winds of up to 105 mph.

Day one at the parks was topped off with dinner at Chef Mickey's, complete with Disney characters signing autographs and twirling napkins during the dinnertime celebration, followed by watching fireworks from the balcony of the Contemporary Resort. As Cinderella's castle changed colors in the distance, framed by exploding fireworks, we all hoped Hurricane Charley would change course.

The next morning, we all woke up in our respective rooms at the Caribbean Beach Resort. Fortunately, there had been a room available just down the hall from ours which my brother and his family were able to move to once evicted from their campsite. We were informed the Animal Kingdom would not be opening as a result of Charley's impending visit, but the other theme parks would be open until 1 p.m. Guests staying at Disney resorts would be given free admission.

Samantha Brown meets with Prince Charming after the hurricane hit.

Because we had found our way around the Magic Kingdom the day before, we decided we would try to go back and make the most of our day cut short. We were able to get on a few rides, and began taking the train back to the main gates at around 12:45. Messages over the intercom continually informed park guests of the impending evacuation and as fast as Cinderella's carriage turned into a pumpkin, when the clock struck 1, the mass exodus began.

We were virtually at the gates when Disney cast members began ushering guests out. Workers in golf carts had already begun closing down concession stands and everything that wasn't bolted down was being taken inside. There wasn't a scrap of paper to be found floating loose anywhere on the premises. As I went through the gates to exit the park, I heard someone wish me a "magical day."

Charley was expected to arrive at roughly 3 p.m., and the routine afternoon thundershower sent many Disney guests into a panic. Charley's arrival was bumped back to 7 p.m. and then to 8 p.m. Local weather forecasters said the hurricane had been upped to a category 4 and would be heading directly for Orlando. By the time Charley hit, I think it had been downgraded to a category 2, which was more than enough for me.

The rooms at the resort where we stayed were all connected by an outside hallway, and we all stood outside my brother's room as we saw the sky gradually change to darker and darker shades of gray. When the winds began to pick up a little, we all went inside.

Flying debris

As Charley began his initial descent, the winds were so heavy it looked as if the rain was falling sideways. As we watched local news stations, one reporter said he had just been hit by flying debris and continued his broadcast looking over one shoulder. Another stood outside and leaned with all her weight into the wind and eventually got tangled up in cables from the camera crew. I had never been so happy to be the kind of reporter that gets to write from a safe, dry location.

As the news crews tempted fate, all seven of us watched the storm at a distance through half-closed blinds. The surfboard my brother had been carrying on top of their suburban leaned vertically in a corner of the room, as it was very possible with the 80 mph winds that were predicted to tear through the area it could easily be turned into a deadly projectile. The wind speed kept increasing and trees began falling outside near the parking lot. Just when it seemed the winds were at their mightiest, everything died down and things were pretty calm.

Knowing it was the eye of the storm and we only had a few minutes, my mother and I quickly ventured outside and down the hall to our own room to try to get a good night's sleep to prepare for what would hopefully be an early morning trip to the parks. Not two minutes after we arrived, the winds picked up again and the storm raged on. I later heard winds reached their peak at 105 mph in some portions of Orlando, but through it all, we never lost power at the resort.

The next morning we were up bright and early in the hopes the parks would be open and we could get a second full day in. The news showed the destruction Charley had caused and one reporter said this was the third time in Walt Disney World history the park has closed its doors. The parks had previously closed during a storm in the 1960s, as well as after Sept.11, and suddenly my trip was one for the history books.

Every day one park opens early for guests staying at Disney resorts, and Saturday was the day for MGM-studios to open at 8 a.m. However, with Charley's visit, the doors opened at their regular 9 a.m. and guests were greeted with perfectly clean streets, not an ounce of debris, and not a tree out of place.

As we entered the park we headed for the "Twilight Zone's Tower of Terror," which invites guests to enter the old Hollywood Hotel and take a ride on an elevator just as the hotel gets struck by lightning. The elevator short circuits, shooting riders up at a fast clip, then abruptly loses power, causing the elevator to drop down without any warning. As my brother, Tammy, and I waited to get on the ride, my brother asked the "bell hop" if this hotel was anything like the hurricane hotel we had stayed at the night before. Disney may have a new attraction on its hands.

Growing fitness craze not just sucking in young set

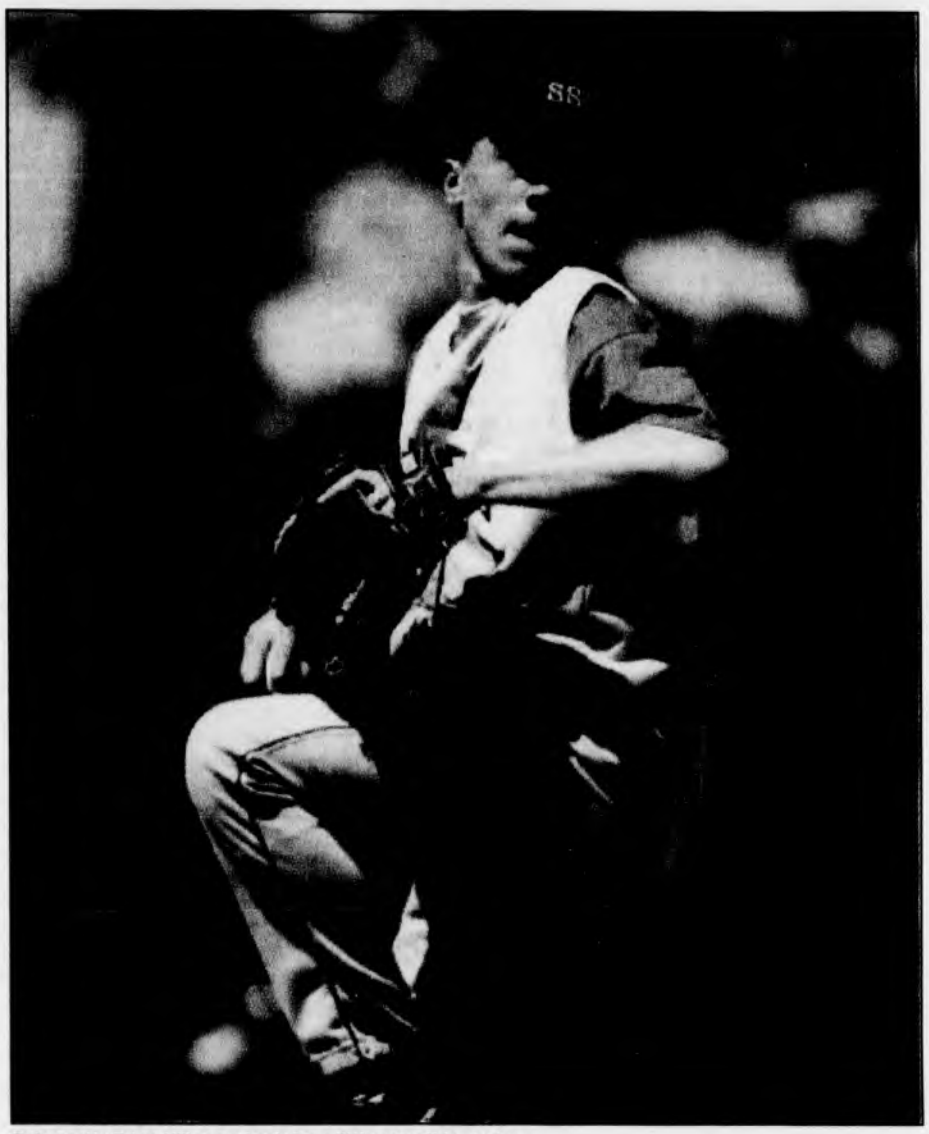
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER



"It's not you're same old grandma anymore," my stepmother, Joanne Papandrea of Scituate, told me with a laugh.

"We're trading in our aprons and wooden spoons for bike helmets and kayaks!"

"You go girl," I replied while secretly worrying that this new attitude could adversely impact the availability of her most excellent chocolate chip cookie. But there's no getting around it: people in my South Shore community are redefining "older."

Take, for example, my Hanover friend Saul Shocket – an amazing strong man whose Russian grandfather wrestled bears. Now almost 61 and a grandfather himself, Saul continues to win power lifting meets. Recently, he won at the National Championships in Philadelphia

Girl for all seasons

Recent CHS grad Buckley was a triple threat athletically

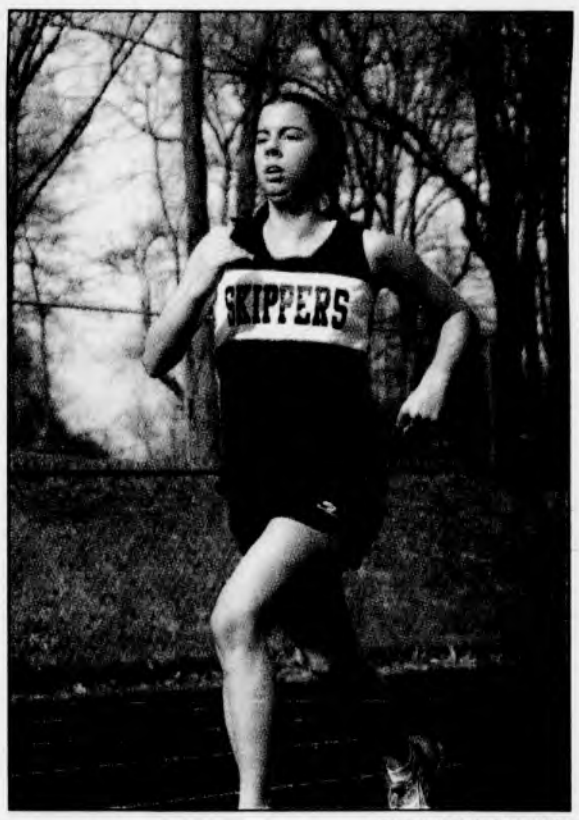
By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Whadayamean Jenn Buckley's not going to play college sports?

This was no doubt the reaction many had locally after reading the bio for the recent Cohasset High graduate that ran with our All-Scholastic girls track team a few weeks back.

The All-Scholastic acknowledgement made it a clean sweep for Jenn in her senior year at CHS, as she also earned the honors in soccer and basketball in the preceding months. This gave her a grand total of six All-Scholastic honorings for her high school career, with two for soccer and three for track—a virtually unprecedented accomplishment.

Unlike the majority of our All-Scholastic athletes, however, college athletics are not in the cards for Jenn…at least not for now.



"I just want to settle in my freshman year and concentrate on academics," explained Buckley, who plans to major in Nursing at Northeastern College. "I have my course load, and I see it's going to be pretty full. I think it's best if I just figure that out first."

Jenn was recruited by a few Div. 3 schools to play soccer, no surprise given the way she keyed the Lady Skippers at both ends of the field from her center-mid position the last three years, leading the team in scoring and directing it to post-season berths each of the past two seasons.

Jenn had seven goals and five assists as a senior, and 12 goals and four assists as a junior on her way to earning team MVP honors and South Shore League all-star honors. She's been described as an absolutely tireless worker with outstanding athleticism and speed. The offensive numbers were surprising considering that she also helped out considerably at the defensive end and the counterattack most often started with her.

Seadogs pack quite a bite

Cohasset's Hill and Chase led AAU team to strong summer season

Cohasset natives Brian Hill and Tommy Chase recently helped lead the South Shore Seadogs to the Championship Round of the National 14 AAU Baseball Championships in Sarasota FL last week completing a spectacular summer for Frank Nile's and Pete Nesseralla's Hingham club.

The team finished its season with 41 wins and 10 losses, a Triple Crown Champions Tourney Championship Memorial Day Weekend in Connecticut, and posted a 4-2 record in the Nationals that earned them a 17th place finish among 54 teams from California, Texas, Florida, Virginia, Connecticut, New Jersey, Indiana, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire.

The first round was highlighted by a early offensive attack lead by Tyler Issadore, Tommy Chase and fellow teammates which allowed them to beat a

Cohasset Little Leaguers shine at Cooperstown Tourney

Well, they say the third time's the charm, and for a select group of Cohasset 12-year old baseball players, it certainly was.

Travelling to the birthplace of baseball, Cooperstown, NY, to take part in the annual Field of Dreams Tourney, last week, the Cohasset Cobras finished placed 12th out of 80 teams in the regular play and finished in the sweet 16 in the tournament. They beat all star teams from Michigan, California, New York, North Carolina and New Hampshire, playing two games a day in the round robin format.

Outrageous and unfair.

Those seem the two most apropos adjectives for summing up the way the Scituate 14-year old baseball all-stars were finally knocked out of the Junior League Eastern Regional championships last Thursday.

After capturing the Massachusetts state championship, Scituate wound up falling to New York state champion Massapequa in the finals of the 11-team Junior League Tourney— held this past week in Tinton Fall, New Jersey— but had to play twice as many games as Massapequa to get to that point.

That's right. You heard correctly. Scituate played six games to Massapequa's three heading into Thursday's championship game. For this game, Massapequa got to go back to its number one starter, James Stone, making his second start of the Regionals on four days rest, while Scituate had to call on Harry Rose, a seldom used pitcher this summer who was making his second start on one day's rest. Scituate lost the game, 6-3, with Rose (hardly surprisingly) tiring in the sixth and surrendering three runs—the difference in the game, for those among you who are mathematically challenged.

So how did this happen?

Because of the odd number of teams in this "double elimination" regional tourney, Massapequa and a four other teams were awarded first round byes by a luck of the draw. After coach Deb Beal certainly sounds as if she believes her former star could do quite well at the college level.

"Jenn was just incredible for us at both ends of the field," said Beal. "Her teammates looked to her for so much. She'd go 100 miles per hour to support the offense and then 200 miles per hour to get back and help out if the other team counterattacked. She probably did twice as much running as anyone on the field, but she never complained."

Jenn, however, had her heart set on Northeastern— a school with Div. 1 athletic programs— for both academic and geographic reasons.

"The nursing program is very good at Northeastern," she explained. "And I really liked the thought of going to school in Boston."

That's right: the small town girl wanted to see what life in the big city is like.

"Yeah, that had a lot to do with my decision too," said Jenn, who actually got to know her way around Boston a bit through visits to her sister Katie when she was attending Harvard. "I like a lot of things about Boston, but there are things I like about Cohasset too. I think this will probably help me decided what type of community I want to live in when I get off on my own."

Playing interscholastic sports at even a Div. 3 level is a huge commitment, one that can not even compare to the level of commitment demanded at the high school level. And the leap in commitment between Div. 1 and Div. 3 athletics is just as large, if not larger.

"I don't know if I'm ready to make that kind of commitment," Jenn admitted honestly. "Maybe next year, if I get comfortable, I'll try to make it as a walk on with the soccer team."

Jenn also admits that going cold turkey on sports is not something she sees herself being able to do.

"I'll play intramural soccer and maybe some other intramural sports to stay sharp and stay in shape," said Jenn. "Northeastern has that huge gym complex, and I can see myself spending a lot of time there just working out and staying active."

Basketball and track are not, however, a possibility. Jenn played basketball because many of her soccer friends did so, and track was a way of staying in shape for soccer. And yet she earned Mariner All-Scholastic honors for those as well, three times for track and then this past winter for basketball.

On the hardwood this winter, Jenn played a key role in helping the Lady Skippers to their first winning season (14-6) and postseason qualification in 16 years. She was the team's leader in assists and 3-point shooting, averaged 9.5 points per game and was selected as a South Shore League all-star. The five-foot-five natural athlete swung between both guard spots and was lauded for clutch play, defensive skills and leadership qualities.

"Jenn was like another coach on the floor," said first year CHS coach John Levangie. "She was our leader both on and off the floor, and just a very intelligent player. She was at her best when the game was on the line."

It was in the spring, though, that Jenn was most accomplished. She earned South Shore League honors in her sophomore, junior and senior seasons. In her junior year, she finished fifth in the mile, eighth in the javelin and third as a member of the 4x800 relay team at the state Class D meet, qualifying for the All-State championships in the latter event.

"Replacing someone like Jenn seems almost impossible to comprehend," said CHS track coach Al LaFountain. "She does so many things well, and was such a great leader."

And yet she laughs over the notion of giving track and field a try at the college level.

"Oh, I couldn't even think about that," she said. "I liked doing it in high school, but I'm not good enough and I really don't have any interest."

So just imagine how well Jenn might do when she has an interest in something and sets her mind to it.

All work, some play

FROM THE SIDELINES

JULIE ANN NEVERO

A look inside a Patriots practice

I don't think I'm alone when I say having a "Case of the Mondays" is a fairly common occurrence amongst those in the working world. I am usually among the masses in this department, but this past Monday was an entirely different story; in fact, I couldn't wait to get up that morning.

The reason: I had VIP tickets to see the New England Patriots practice at Gillette Stadium.

Still all jazzed up over last Friday night's preseason-opening 24-6 lashing of the Philadelphia Eagles — home to one of the most overrated quarterbacks in the NFL, if you want my honest opinion — I was glowing at the idea of seeing our two-time Super Bowl champs up close and personal (15 feet away to be exact).

To put it bluntly, the experience was everything I hoped it would be. Perhaps a bit uneventful for some of the more noted, and seemingly bored, sports journalists in attendance (i.e. The Globe's Michael Smith and Boston Herald's Michael Felger), I thought it was all the rage.

Granted there was nothing really major going on, drills here, pattern plays there, but it was things like the coaches/players constant workmanship ethic coupled with some light-hearted moments that made the two hour and 15 minute practice inside the field house at Gillette so enjoyable.

Exhibit one: The organization of it all. The practice consisted of 15 sessions, most of which ran between 15 and 20 minutes. A running time was kept and displayed during each session, but only head coach Bill Belichick's whistle signified their real end. Pats players moved seamlessly through each stage during which they were routinely grouped with their units (i.e. offense and kickers in white, quarterbacks in red, defense in blue). Through it all, there were no complaints, no groans, no slacking. Just a workhorse mentality that everyone on the team seemed to share.

This is not to say the morning was all business, however.

Exhibit two: Offensive lineman Matt Light treating everyone to a Harry Carey impersonation during team calisthenics. With the offensive players and defensive players lined up neatly and facing each other on opposite sides of the 60-yard practice field, Light bent on one knee and began speaking like and imitating the mannerisms of the late, great Chicago Cubs announcer. Although I couldn't exactly hear what he was saying, I could tell he definitely had a knack for it and that perhaps it's something he does on a regular basis. Pure comedy.

After stretches, things got a little loud on the field as the Pats psyched themselves up for drills. With coaches "encouraging" them with "Let's go's" and "Move it, move it, move its" the players hustled around several different apparatus, not unlike those seen on any area high school football field. (Offensive line coach Dante Scarnecchia was the loudest, sounding eerily similar to the drill sergeant in Full Metal Jacket, minus the overdose of crude remarks and obscenities, of course).

The drills session was one aspect in which I saw the human element of the players. One wouldn't think athletes on a two-time Super Bowl championship team would have to do such basic drills, but they did them and they did them well. There were, of course, other things that helped me see the players as ordinary people, more specifically two others.

Exhibit three (A): Seeing some of the players' wives and children in attendance. All huddled in their own set of bleachers in a corner of the field house, the wives discussed things like what their families had for dinner the night before while their little ones ran circles around them. Linebacker Tedy Bruschi's children in particular were perhaps the most adorable, hanging on the fence that bordered the field wearing pint-sized No. 54 game jerseys and giving "Daddy" a wave every time he ran to the sideline during shift changes.

Exhibit three (B): Belching. We all do it and apparently so do they, and quite loudly at that. With the players lined up to run offensive/defensive schemes, I can recall four different times when coaches instructions on the upcoming play were interrupted by a belch, earth-shattering ones at that. Of course, I can't be sure, but I believe linebacker Matt Chatham was the culprit on all four occasions. More comic relief.

Once the players were good and warmed up, they finally got to the good stuff in Session 10: Running full offensive/defensive plays in game-like situations. This was where we got to see what kind of schemes the Pats had been working on and whether or not they were any good. For the most part, they were. Quarterback Tom Brady completed a handful of beauties to several receivers, the best one I could recall was a 20-yard floater up the middle to David Patten that drew applause from the spectators, myself included, and "Ata boy, Tommy's" from the players on the sideline.

Patten and tight end Christian Fauria took the bulk of the passes and looked great doing so. But this is training camp and thus, everyone got a shot to get some action. And while all the players worked hard, perhaps no one showed more enthusiasm than the rookies.

Exhibit four: Cedric Cobbs. Wearing No. 10, the 23-year-old rookie out of the University of Arkansas was everything a rookie should be in this situation: attentive, eager, and willing. Brady went deep to Cobbs a couple of times and he made some nice catches, but it was Cobbs' ever-present enthusiasm that made him stick out like sore thumb. For example, after completing several plays, Cobbs SPRINTED back to the huddle every time. I remember thinking, "Wow. This guy is hungry and he really wants on the team, or at least on the practice squad."

As good as the offense looked, the defense was equally impressive. With the smell of sweat now looming in the air of the climate controlled field house, defensive end Willie McGinest and safety Rodney Harrison each picked of passes from backup QB's Rohan Davey and Kliff Kingsbury, thanks in large part to pressure on the line from defensive tackle Richard Seymour, whom we all know by now is the best defensive player in the NFL.

Conerbacks Ty Law and Asante Samuel also performed well, each breaking up passes intended for Patten and wide out David Givens. (This is just an aside, but Law showed up to practice looking a lot like Belichick shows up to games. Hanging out from underneath Law's light blue practice jersey — which for some reason differed from the dark blue shirts worn by the rest of the defensive players — was a frumpy gray sweatshirt which he accented with equally frumpy gray sweatpants. Basically, he looked like a slob. Sorry, that's just the girl in me).

Running backs Kevin Faulk and newly acquired Corey Dillon got me excited at the idea of the Pats having a truly productive running game this season. Both appeared strong and quick and full of promise in an area that has never really been a strong suit for New England.

As I mentioned before, the practice ran so smoothly based in large part to the organization of it. But I thought there was perhaps a bigger reason for its cohesion.

Exhibit five: Teamwork. No matter where they were in the sessions or on the field, support from the coaches and players was always present. When one string of the Pats offense and defense was on the field, the rest of the players gathered on the sidelines and watched intently, rewarding the finer plays with "Woooo's" and "Oh yeah's". During one passing play, Patten darted down the field being pursued by Harrison. Standing within earshot of the spectators a winded Harrison told Patten, "I just couldn't keep up with you, man" to which Patten replied, "I knew I wasn't getting the ball, but I had to make you run somehow." The friendly exchange made us all chuckle and further drilled home the fact that on this team, there are no egos. Throughout each of their championship seasons the Pats have always maintained that the team comes first and we saw this belief also extends to practice.

In the final session, we became part of the action.

Exhibit six: Dodging field goals off the foot of kicker Adam Vinatieri. The famed kicker went 5-for-6 in field goal attempts from varying distances, booting the ball through makeshift uprights that stood about 15 feet in front of the spectators. After going through, the ball would connect with the field house wall above us with a resounding "boom" and fall hard and fast to the ground prompting several of us to test our reflexes and get the heck out of the way. While I've never had to personally, I could imagine it was a lot like trying to dodge a bullet.

All in all, I had an absolute blast at the practice — in case you couldn't tell by now — and basically thought you, the readers, might enjoy hearing about it. It was the perfect blend of sports and comedy, with a side of camaraderie and I can only hope I get to go again sometime. I never thought a practice could be so enjoyable, but I guess it's pretty easy to enjoy yourself when you're watching the pros.

Go Pats.

Saul Shocket (front) has worked wonders with many local athletes, among them (back, L-R) Kingston's Tim Beane (a 2003 Mariners All-Scholastic football player), his dad Lee Beane and Phil Berrio.

and is now qualified for the Worlds in Belgium this October. Even against guys in their twenties, and with the added burden of an injured tendon, the win was an easy one for Shocket.

And how about Lee Beane's story: his ankles, left knee and right wrist were so painful from degenerative joint disease that the 45-year-old Kingston resident was bed ridden for over a year. To complicate matters, the inactivity resulted in weight gain. He one tipped the scales at over 400-pounds. So you might be a little surprised to know that Beane competed in and won at a local power-lifting meet. The Surf Pounders association sponsored the meet, held on June 13th at the Bay State Athletic Club in Scituate.

Beane, who has shed 124-pounds since November, won the meet in the 308-pound weight class for his age group and also won the open division, which includes all ages. In the process, he established multiple world records.

Dr Singh, of Hanover, helped Beane manage his pain and chiropractor Dr. Rogers, of Pembroke, worked on Beane even when he was unable to pay. Beane now works with Shocket as a strength coach at SETS (Saul's Elite Training Systems) in Norwell and has passed Shocket's training techniques on to family members, including star athlete son Tim. Currently both father and son play football with the Randolph Oilers.

Phil Berrio, 48, has been Shocket's training partner for 20 years.

"Saul sort of made me his project – he's a true mentor. I'm much stronger now than I was at 18," the soft-spoken Weymouth man told me with a smile.

Where most people see themselves getting older, Berrio sees himself getting stronger.

"You can be old when you're 20 and young at 70," offered Berrio. "It's about tenacity, attitude, and a good support system. Saul and I draw from each other's strength

"The advantage you have when you're older is that you train smarter and avoid injury. Young guys usually always over train."

Berrio recently competed with Shocket in Philadelphia, and he too qualified for the Worlds in Belgium.

Duxbury sports attorney Brian Cook has represented both emerging athletes and aging sports stars. He's currently working with Leigh Montville to turn his book on Ted Williams in to a movie.

"When Ted Williams turned 35 he felt it was time to retire," Cook says "At that time no one played professionally beyond mid-thirties. Now a number of professional athletes continue to play well in to their forties."

Peter McRae teaches a style of Okinawan karate called Uechi-Ryu in Plymouth. The soon to be 50-year old fondly remembers a student named Louise.

"She came to learn karate when she was in her 70's and she brought her friend Beatrice," recalled McRae. "The two of them became brown belts. "'I'd rather wear out than rust out!' Louise loved to say."

McRae takes frequent trips to Okinawa and told me: "I've seen men there, men in their 70s, working out in the heat for three hours straight. I was so impressed with how much fun they were having Could they out run a young guy? Probably not , but those men transcended training. They were artists."

McRae, whose 72-year old dad still practices karate and walks four miles each day, says the average age of his students is 40, but he has had plenty of students in their 70s and 80s. McRae recommends reading bestseller "The Okinawa Program"- a serious study of longevity in Okinawa. The country has the highest percentage of centenarians in the world.

My friend Saul continues to develop techniques to help his clients stay strong and competitive at any age. Shocket, who has trained 53-year-old Aerosmith drummer Joey Kramer for years, says Kramer's been able to maintain a competitive edge through strength training.

"Drumming is very physically demanding," Shocket told me, "And Joey trains for it just like any athlete would."

Other clients include Marshfield golfer Geoff Sisk who recently won $30,000 in the US Open, and former Boston Bruin Teddy Donato, now head coach for the Harvard hockey team.

Everyone I talked with had stories of friends and neighbors getting older and doing more than when they were younger.

My step mom Joanne's friend, Ann Johnson, also in her sixties, is an avid kayaker and another friend is Elizabeth Durant, of Cohasset ,who proudly states her age at 67 and fi. Durant is a downhill skier and can be seen locally in her melon seed sailboat with a sailing companion who's in her eighties. Durant stays strong by working out at McGill Gardner in Scituate.

I don't know about you but I'm sure inspired. There'll be no "over the hill" in my future unless, of course, it's while I'm peddling on my bike.

Seadogs pack quite a bite

number one seed from Virginia and a 1-hit complete game by Brian Hill over New Jersey which gave the seadogs a 3-0 record going into the second round for the first time in the club's 13 year history.

In the second round the Seadogs ran into a Tampa Gators (2rd overall) team that would be tough to beat. Short on pitching, the 'Dogs lost in a run ruled 12-1 game. The next game was against fellow New Englanders and Massachusetts state champs, The New England Lighting (7th overall). As the case in the previous game, the Seadogs came up short on pitching as Chris Amrhien and Tommy Chase put in strong efforts but the defense stalled as the Seadogs fell 8-1.

The highlight of the Seadogs season came in the third game of the second round. Already eliminated and all but playing for pride, they took on the defending national champions the Central Florida Cyclones, with Hill on the mound coming back on three days rest. The teams stayed locked at 0-0 until the Seadogs would score 4 in the top of the 3. The Cyclones would get 1 back in the bottom of the inning making the score 4-1. The 'Dogs would add one more in the 4th and that was enough for Hill. The Seadogs defense played very strongly in the last game led by Andrew Aizenstadt, Alex Pedicini, and Tommy Chase. With the score 5-2 in the bottom of the 7th and the bases loaded Hill would strike out Cyclones slugger Kyle Parker who had already smoked 2 doubles off him that day to end the game and secure the victory and cap a wonderful season. Hill would be nominated for National AAU All-American after his two pitching performances and is still waiting to see if he made it.

The winner of the tournament would end up being the Starmaker Sharks from California as the beat the Tampa Gators in the final. The Cyclones would lose in the semi-finals of the tournament but went on win there consolation game to finish third in the nation.

Thank you to all the Seadogs players, coaches, and parents, who made this season great.

Scituate team falls on uneven playing field

winning its first two games, Scituate lost to another of those teams to get a bye, Maine state champion Saco.

Saco had just one game under its belt at that point, and thus got to go with its number two pitcher while Scituate had to go with a hurler who had not started a game throughout the postseason. You see, given there were one to three days off between games throughout the district and state championships, Scituate had been able to ride its aces, Blaine O'Brien and Chris Barrow, all the way to a state championship, just as the other state champs had.

Anyway, Scituate's seldom used number three hurler had some serious control difficulties and wound up walking several Saco hitters. The end result was the locals found themselves facing a 5-0 deficit after one. Scituate wound up losing the game, 7-4, despite out-hitting Saco, 10-5.

"I'd like to say the better team won, but I really don't think that was the case," said somber Scituate head coach Bill Signorelli following the loss.

This put Scituate in the loser's bracket in the double elimination tourney. Three times the locals fended off elimination. First, Harry Rose emerged from deep on the pitching depth chart to throw a six inning gem, keying Scituate to a 6-3 win over New Jersey state champ Bloomfield. Staff aces O'Brien and Barrow then came back on three days rest and two days rest, respectively, to earn their second wins of the tourney in doubleheader action Wednesday—ousting host Tinton Falls and Saco, respectively.

This set the stage for Thursday morning's showdown with the well rested Massapequa team. If the Scituate lads had somehow found a way to win there, they'd have had to come back with number four hurler Sean Cooney, who closed things out for Rose in game 1, against Massapequa's number two that evening. It was a double elimination tourney, after all, and O'Brien, Cooney and Rose were all ineligible to pitch at this point.

Talk about you uneven playing fields. How can Regional administrators possibly consider this an acceptable scenario? How do you explain to young ballplayers that their reward for winning a state championship might not necessarily by a fair shake?

Obviously, you shouldn't have to.

Never mind the byes. The real question is why did Junior League sanction a double elimination tourney rather than the same kind of a round robin its sister youth league, Little League, uses for its well known Williamsport Tourney?

The official explanation from Tinton Falls Little League President Bob Capolla was there simply wasn't time to do anything else. His league was awarded the tourney that got underway Saturday and had to be completed by Thursday night. With only one Junior League field available, the best Tinton Falls Little League could do was play four games each of the first three days That left only three days to determine a champion and get that team off to Taylor, Michigan for the start of the Junior League World Series on Friday.

"This is the format we've always used," explained Capolla. "I wish we didn't have to, but the time element makes it impossible to do anything else. The older kids start later than the Little Leaguers, and this is what we're left with.

"I feel bad for Scituate. That was a great group they sent down here. The parents, the coaches, the players; they were a class act right across the board. But until someone figures out a better way to do this, this is the format we're stuck with."

OK. Good answer. Clearly, it's not the fault of the folks in Tinton Falls.

But, why, pray tell, was the event awarded to a league with just one field. Aren't there any leagues in the 11 state East region that had access to more than a single field?

All of the other Junior League Regional Tourneys used the round robin format. In the West, for example, 12 teams were separated into two "pools", and the teams went head-to-head within this pool in four games over four days. At the end of this, the top two teams from both pools advanced on, with head-to-head records determining tiebreakers, to semifinals and then the finals. Why couldn't the east have followed a similar format?

"The excuses we got for this format aren't excuses at all," charged Scituate assistant coach Mike O'Brien. "We were told it was a shortage of time and fields. That's just ridiculous. You can't do this to kids."

Not that it will bring justice to this year's situation, but Scituate head coach Bill Signorelli plans to file a formal protest with the Junior League headquarters regarding this format.

"I don't know if it'll make a difference or not, but I'd feel guilty if I didn't take some step toward trying to see this doesn't happen to another good team next year. Anyone can see this is totally unfair."

Speaking of outrageously unfair matters, can I ask what the folks at the Patriot Ledger were thinking, or rather not thinking, where this team was concerned?

It is generally bad form to openly rip a competing paper, but I've got to make an exception here. These Scituate kids deserved a whole lot better than they got from the local daily. The powers that be in the Ledger sports department didn't exactly cover themselves with glory, running three or four fairly short pieces last week inside the sports sections— sports sections, mind you, that generally had more wire stories than in-house stories out front. Doesn't anyone write for that paper anymore?

It boggles the mind that, with Scituate coaches making daily phone calls to the Ledger to report highlights, not a single person within that department raised the notion that perhaps it would be a good idea to jump on this story with both feet. That paper only covers approximately 30 communities. When a youth baseball team from one of those communities wins a state title, never mind the preceding district title, you figure someone up there in Quincy would float the idea of… oh, I don't know, assigning a stringer to keep tabs on them, at the very least.

You just know if Quincy or Weymouth or Milton had been the state Junior League champs, it would have been front page news. How can I state this with such confidence? Remember all the front page and expanded coverage that was provided in the Ledger last year when Quincy and Weymouth hosted the 14-year old Babe Ruth World Series?...I do, and a few folks in Scituate have called to let me know they do too.

And Quincy and Weymouth weren't champions of anything. Those leagues gained automatic entry through the host exception. The state champion in '03 was Plymouth (OK, I'm throwing this in because I coach in that league).

Not that it matters to us here at CNC. Heck, the Ledger totally dropping the ball makes our front page coverage over the last six weeks look that much better. If it wasn't for the insult dealt these kids, I'd have been perfectly happy to gloat in silence…OK, maybe not total silence, but you wouldn't have been reading about it in this space.

Cooperstown, NY for a week of exciting baseball tournament action. For many of the boys, this was their third and final trip to baseball's hometown. Their first taste of national play occurred in June of 2002, when they arrived as fresh faced 10-year olds.

Their success was minimal but the experience was imminently more gratifying than their record. Last year, as 11-year olds, they competed against the premier 12-twelve year olds from around the country. The highlight of the week last year was a sixth place finish in the skills competition known as Around the Horn.

This time around , the Cobras notched seven victories with just two losses against highly competitive teams from around our nation. They were eliminated from the tournament with a second round loss to the fifth ranked Storm of Southern California.

The Cohasset Cobras were the highest ranked New England team. Many of the competitive teams were AAU clubs from California and the Southeast, where baseball is a year round sport.

Coached by Ralph Berry, Mike Kearney and Bob McCunney, the Cobras roster included John Giuggio, Robby McCunney, Brendan Doonan, Johnny Maher, John Kearney, Jordan Berry and JoDi Rosano. Jack Colton, from Milton, Ryan Miller, from Weymouth, Harry Bourikas, from Braintree, and John Ainsley, from Quincy, rounded out the Cohasset Cobras roster. These boys hailed from the very talented and successful Seadogs team that Coach Berry was involved with last year.

All pistons were firing for the Cobras as their explosive offense was supported by stellar defense and pitching. Sharing the mound for the Cobras were Harry Bourikas, Robby McCunney, Brendan Doonan. Jack Colton and Jordan Berry. John Kearney also made an appearance on the mound and secured a win for the hometown boys.

"Harry's pitching performance against Starmaker, a powerhouse team from Northern California, was one of the best pitching performances that I have ever seen at that age level," said Coach Kearney of one Bourikas outing.

Behind the plate for most of the week, John Giuggio caught for our legion of hurlers and kept the team focused and in control. Catching for six different pitchers is no easy task, but Giuggio controlled the field of play.

Veteran Cohasset All-Star JoDi Rosano, known for his speed and smart base running, kept opposing infielders on their toes during the week. JoDi was the Cobras go-to guy when heads-up base running was needed.

The offense was just as impressive, averaging 13 hits a game. John Kearney and Jack Colton batted over .500 for the week.

Home run production was likewise impressive, as seven Cobras cleared the wall, some several times. Ryan Miller went yard five times, Robby McCunney and Brendan Doonan three times each, Johnny Maher and Jack Colton twice each and Jordan Berry and John Ainsley each had one.

"There was an incredible display of hitting," Coach McCunney said. "There was a magic to the boys as they enthusiastically played each and every game."

Individual game highlights:

Miller and McCunney belted home runs versus the Saline Buzz. Combined with three hits from Colton and two each from Giuggio and Kearney, the Cobras defeated the Buzz, 11-2.

In a resounding 18-1 win over the Glen Oaks Gangstas, Miller went 3-for-4 with a grand slam home run. McCunney had a no-hitter going until the last inning. That was broken up when a Glen Oaks batter, on an 0-2 count, saw his line drive land in left field. Rob closed the game with a one-hitter and helped his own cause with a home run. John Kearney went 3-for-3 at the plate.

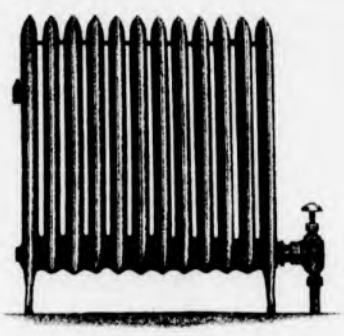
The Cobras beat an undefeated Northern California team, Star Maker, in regular play, 10-2. Cohasset secured the win, scoring runs throughout the game. Jordan Berry and John Ainsley each launched a home run in the sixth inning for the Cobras.

The South Cheektowaga Thunder fell in defeat to the Cobras, losing 16-12. The Cobras came out on top with a walk off grand slam home run by Brendan Doonan. Johnny Maher also belted a home run.

In a 13-1 romp over the Charlotte HUAH, Ryan Miller pitched a one-hitter and had a two-run dinger. Johnny Maher registered his second home run of the week.

The Cobras first loss of the week came at the hands of the OC Hurricanes in a tightly fought 10-8 game in extra innings. The lead passed back and forth during the game. So impressed with the play of both teams, the umpires congratulated each team on their great performances. Jack Colton went 3-for-4 at the plate and Brendan Doonan had a home run.

The Cobras then bounced back and defeated the neighboring NH Diamond Dawgs the following day, 11-6. Ryan Miller was 3-for-4 with a home run. Robby McCunney also had a home run.



In an 80-team tournament, following regular play, the Cobras reached the final 16 tourney.

They handily defeated the Michigan Titans, 16-4, to open. Ryan Miller and Brendan Doonan each had home runs. John Kearney and Jack Colton had four hits each.

The Cobras fell to the Storm of California in the next round and ended their tournament play.

"I'm proud of the boys," Coach Berry said. "They played with positive upbeat attitudes and they played smart baseball. I couldn't have asked for more."

Remembering his comments following the first year the boys went to Cooperstown, he reiterated: "something special happened in Cohasset twelve years ago. We have a talented, special group of kids here."

Absentee ballots are available at Town Hall

Absentee ballots for the State Primary on Tuesday, Sept. 14, are now available at the Town Clerk's office.

Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime on Monday, Sept. 13, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

1. Absence from the town during the hours the polls is open.
2. Physical disability.
3. Religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed, which ballot is requested, Democrat, Republican, Libertarian, or Green Rainbow and the signature of the applicant. If a voter is enrolled in a political designation they may not vote in any state or presidential primary.

A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter; sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by Sept. 14, to be counted.

The town will use the AccuVote optical scan system. Instructions to voters are printed on the ballot and any pen or pencil may be used. To vote, completely fill in the oval to the right of your choice. Secrecy sleeves are available at the check in tables. The ballots can be inserted into the machine face up, face down, etc. and will be read. It is the usual policy to flip the ballot over so the blank side shows as they insert it into the machine. Voters who are uncomfortable with this should use the secrecy sleeve.

If you are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast your vote at the polling place, you may file a letter from your physician with your town clerk, stating that you are permanently unable to cast your vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot for you to sign and return will be mailed to you by the town clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

commission would not give an answer for either piece of property that night, he would be inclined to grant the connections. However, he said he doesn't want to see the board get into a position where it has made a mistake. The commission will review all information and will get back to both landowners at its next meeting, slated for Sept. 27. The commission will also be contacting other homeowners which may have a similar situation as Donovan and Sullivan, to assess the potential impact should others come forward.

Revolutionary War encampment Aug. 28

The call is out! British redcoats are on their way to Fort Revere Park in Hull, expected to arrive on Saturday morning, Aug. 28, at 10 a.m. Unfortunately for them, they will be trying to occupy space already claimed by Colonial militia and allied French soldiers. What will happen when they come together? Come to the annual Fort Revere Revolutionary War Encampment to find out.

Experience Revolutionary War camp life as presented by the men and women of the Billerica Minutemen and other living history actors from the region. Kids can learn candle making and other historical skills, talk to a battlefield surgeon, and even drill with British soldiers. Cannon and mortar firing displays will be mixed with mock battles and more.

All events at Fort Revere Park are free of charge. No alcohol is allowed on the site, and visitors should dress appropriately. Light refreshments will be available for purchase. For information call John Galluzzo at 781-724-7131, or Matt Tobin at 617-727-4468.

Characters:

Sister Mary Regina (Reverend Mother) is to the outside world a model Mother Superior even if she is a little overweight. But to those who know her, she is an outrageous, quick-witted soul who knows how to get a laugh. She tries to convince you that she is strict, but everyone knows that her "bark is worse than her bite".

Sister Mary Hubert is a kind person who always tries to be understanding and diplomatic. She teaches the Novices the ground rules, and is supposed to be dignified. But with the slightest bit of encouragement, she is ready to kick up her heels. She and Reverend Mother have a healthy rivalry and are always trying to outdo each other.

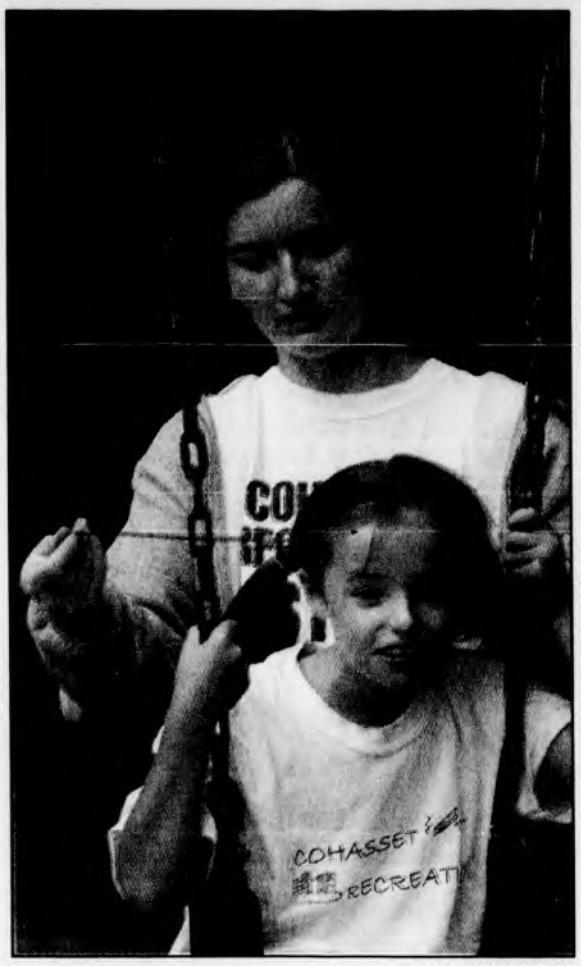
Sister Robert Anne is a tough streetwise nun who has a heart of gold. All the kids adore her because she speaks their language. And she can hit a baseball out of the park.

Sister Mary Amnesia is a picture of innocence. She can't remember her past and so looks at each new day with a childlike joy.

Sister Mary Leo has been a professional dancer before she entered the convent and is always eager to display her talent. She is very impressionable because she is young and can easily be led astray.

Plain Clothes Nuns/Chorus There will be a chorus of 3-5 SINGING NUNS to serve as back ups for the principles in some of the numbers. Also looking for non singing Plain Clothes Nuns to be in the audience and participate in the show.

Alix White exhibit at Science Center



The South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell, will exhibit a collection of paintings by Cohasset artist Alix White, titled "Weather Report," through Aug. 30. "I primarily paint on location," said White. "Living near the coast, I am in awe of how quickly a view will change based on atmospheric conditions - the dialogue between the sky and the ocean for instance. Colors can invert. Winds can change and my composition changes." The works in her exhibit include locations from Marshfield to Quincy, and strive to portray the natural world in the 21st century. The exhibit can also be viewed during regular business hours, Monday through Saturday, 9:30a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

A new sign heralds the recruiting office at the Hingham Armory on Central Street.

Sign of the times at Armory

National Guard steps up recruiting

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Massachusetts National Guard Armory on Central Street in Hingham has been relatively quiet since the return of the 1058th Transportation Company from Iraq the end of April.

The soldiers, who have reconnected with their families after 14 months in a war zone, still report to the Armory for drills one weekend a month.

But there is something new at the Armory – a large white sign posted on the lawn out front letting passersby know there is a recruiter available at the site.

Capt. Winfield Danielson, public affairs officer for the Massachusetts National Guard, said the new sign is part of an effort to make recruiting for the organization more visible in the state and is not related to a need for more soldiers due to the global War on Terrorism.

"There has not been an operational change," Danielson said. "It's just to let people know there is a recruiter operating out of there – most armories have full-time recruiters and many people don't know that.

"It's basically to let the community know people can join the National Guard."

Danielson said numbers for the Mass. National Guard have been down for the past eight-to10 years due in large part to the fact active duty posts have closed in the state, including Ft. Devens and Westover Air Force Base – which now operate as reserve posts. The bases closed under BRAC (Base Realignment and Closure), a federal program that recognized the reduced need for a standing army after the Cold War ended, he explained.

"The nearest active duty post is Ft. Drum, N.Y. and that's six hours away," he said. "There isn't an active duty infrastructure here – like there is in Ft. Bragg, N.C. for example.

"So when you go to high school, you might not think of the Army as a career because you're not exposed to people on an active duty post."

Danielson said the Mass. National Guard's recruiting numbers have not matched attrition since at least 1998, well before 9-11 and the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq.

The authorized strength for the Army and Air Force National Guard in the state is roughly 11,000. In fiscal year 1998, the Mass. National Guard had 10,600 servicemen and women, declining to roughly 9,500 in fiscal year 2002. Numbers for fiscal year 2003 are not available. [The Armed Forces use the federal fiscal year that ends in October.]

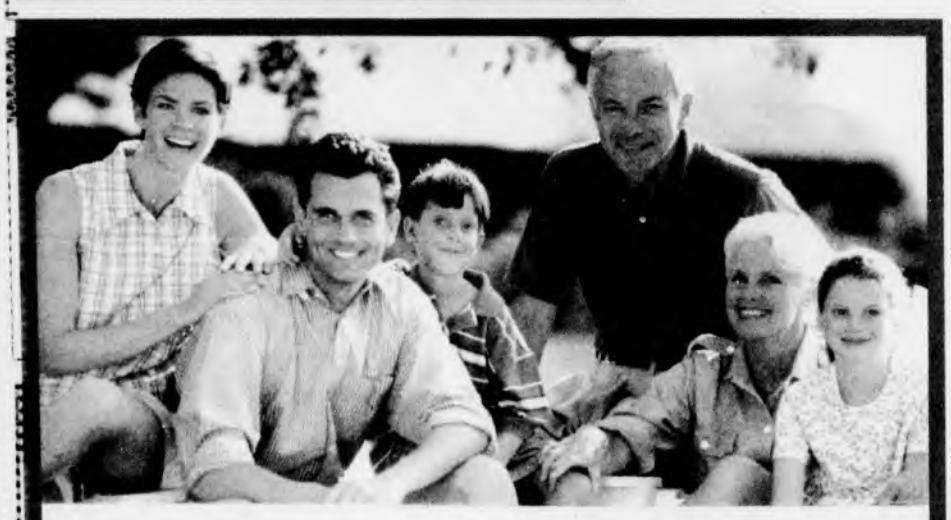
"Our recruiting was down 33 percent in fiscal year 2003," Danielson said, about the Mass. National Guard. "Meaning we brought in one-third less people than in fiscal year 2002."

"We took a hit there and don't know if it's the lack of infrastructure – it was a busy year for us operationally," he said..

Danielson said the Gen. George W. Keefe, adjutant general of the Mass. National Guard, has made recruiting a priority. Recruiting is up 25 percent so far in fiscal year in 2004, he said.

In addition to signage, the Mass. National Guard is partnering with organizations such as the Boston Bruins and New England Patriots — to conduct recruiting efforts at training camps or games.

"We're improving our exposure," he said, pointing out the best recruiters are National Guard soldiers and airmen.



If a potential recruit stops by the Hingham Armory, he or she is not limited to signing up for the 1058th. Potential soldiers can choose from a number of units, including transportation, infantry, military police, water purification, aviation (helicopters), artillery and engineers. Recruiters can also refer applicants to the Air National Guard or active duty service branches.

Soldiers in the National Guard typically drill one weekend a month and two weeks a year. After they signup, they spend several months in basic training and advanced individual training.

Currently there are two Mass. National Guard units in Iraq and one in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. There are several units training for deployment at Ft. Drum.

Since Sept. 11, 2001, upwards of 7,000 soldiers with the Mass. National Guard have been on active duty at some time, of those 3,000 served overseas.

The Massachusetts National Guard dates back to 1636.
